Beauty and Health Lurk in Bath Tub

From the most ancient days to the present, men and women have believed in the beautifying as well as cleansing effects of water, and today it is generally agreed that health, cleanliness, beauty, and a well-groomed appearance require at least one complete bath each day, while two are preferable—a warm and cool one.

A warm tub bath at night just before retiring, and in the morning a quick tub, sponge, or shower of cool or tepid water seems an ideal system. Twenty minutes is as long as any one should remain in the tub. Three minutes is long enough for the cool sponge in the morning.

Then, when you wish a particularly soothing, restful beauty bath to rest tired nerves and to give the sense of luxurious well-being so needed after a day in which everything went wrong; when you are completely exhausted, physically and nervously, you will find this most effective.

Turn on the water for a good hot bath, and while the room is steamy, anoint your face with a cleansing cream. Get into the tub with the cream on your face and let your body soak in the hot water for ten minutes by the clock. Have a clean cloth on hand to wipe your face free of cream before you turn on the shower. If you do not wish to get the hair wet use a hand spray and pour cool water, not too cold, over the body. When you have thoroughly dried your body, a quick rub with 95 per cent grain alcohol will close the pores of your skin and complete the restful, bracing effect of your beauty bath.

Then jump into bed for ten minutes. Before you get into bed have on the table a bowl of very warm water and a couple of tiny cotton pads. Dip the cotton into the water and lay a piece over each closed eyelid to relax the muscles. Just lie there and think yourself into as nearly a state of coma, mentally and physically, as you can. You will get up feeling fresh and rested, ready for anything the evening may bring.
