Starting the Calf

A 50-pound calf at birth should have about 8 pounds or a gallon of milk a day, and one weighing 80 to 90 pounds about a gallon and a half. It is better to give too little at the start than too much. Feed the milk at the same temperature—about 90 degrees—all the time.

Watering Cows Effects Milk

Cows watered once a day drink less and produce less than those watered twice a day or at will. In experiments by the United States Department of Agriculture, those watered twice a day drank as much but produced less than those watered at will. The maximum difference in production, between watering once a day and at will was about 5 per cent. The higher the production the greater the benefit to be derived from frequent watering.

CHAMBER SECRETARIES AT UNIVERSITY MEETING

University of Oregon, Eugene, Ore., March 24.—(Special)—Secretaries representing chambers of commerce all over the state are gathered this week at Eugene for the seventh annual Short Course for Commercial Secretaries which is held under the auspices of the State Association of Commercial Organization Secretaries and the School of Business Administration at the University of Oregon.

The purpose of this short course, as explained by Lynn Sabin, of Klamath Falls, president of this year's sessions, is to bring secretaries together to exchange experiences, to foster industries that pay, and to promote co-operation between agencies for making agriculture and marketing a success.

Instructor in charge of the technical problems facing local organizations is J. A. Harader, manager of the Boise, (Idaho) Chamber of Commerce, who has been active in state development movements in both Idaho and Montana.

Mr. Harader, in his lectures before the secretaries during the sessions of the first two days, emphasized the importance of chambers of commerce attending to the producing end of the industries in their communities, extending their activities to include problems of agriculture and marketing in order to insure healthy trade conditions within the towns.

Paul Cragstone, manager of the Western Division, United States Chamber of Commerce, with headquarters in San Francisco, is giving a series of lectures on work of the national organization, with suggestions as to how the local organizations may cooperate with the larger groups in the work of developing the whole Pacific Coast.

One of the features of this year's short course session is the carrying out of the program adopted last year of having committees make reports on investigations carried on for a year on such matters as agriculture and marketing, industrial development, land settlement, membership and budgets, the unpaid secretary, and city planning.

At the Monday afternoon session, E. C. Reynolds, of La Grande, gave the report of the membership committee; and Tuesday C. A. Brodersen, of Forest Grove, gave his committee's investigations in connection with the "unpaid secretary." He recommended that some method of informing the secretaries throughout the state of action that might prove helpful to the state as a whole be adopted.

During this week visiting secretaries will receive instruction in public speaking from H. E. Rosson, member of the University faculty.

Irving E. Vining president of the State Chamber of Commerce, W. G. Ide, secretary of the State Chamber of Commerce, and Arthur Foster, of the Portland organization, are among those enrolled for the course.
