CHAPTER XI. A Bargain for a Woman
At last Edna spoke in low, even tones.

"What do you expect to do with me, please?"

"We shall have to do whatever is best for yourself," I managed to answer. "That will be determined when we reach the stage line, I suppose."

"Thank you! Once at the stage line and I shall contrive. You must have no thought of me. I understand very well that we should not travel far in company—and you may not wish to go in my direction. You have plans of your own?"

"None of any great moment. Everything has failed me, to date. There is only one place left New York State, where I came from."

"You have one more place than I," she replied.

Her voice had a quality of definite estimation which needed, humbled, and isolated me, as if I lacked in some essential to a standard set.

"Well at home you will live comfortably. You will need to wear no belt weapon. The police will protect you. You can marry the girl next door—or even take changes of the one across the street, her parentage being comme il faut. Your children will love to hear of the rough mule-whacker trail—yes, you will have great tales but you will not mention that you killed a man who tried to kill you and then rode for a night with a strange woman alone at our stirrup! Your course is the safe course. By all means take it, Mr. Beeson."

"That I shall do, madam," I retorted. "The West and I have not agreed. I wish to God I had never seen it—I did not conceive that I should have to take a human life—become like an outlaw in the night, riding for refuge—" And I choked passionately.

"You deserve much sympathy," she remarked.

I lapsed into a turbulence of voiceless rage at myself.

For a time our mules plodded with sundry snorts and stares as if they were seeing portents in the moonshine. Eventually their imaginings dulled, so that they now moved careless of where or why.

I could not but be aware of my companion. Her hair glistened palely, for she rode bareheaded; her Mormon gown, tightened under her as she sat astride, revealed the lines of her boyish limbs.

She was a woman, in any guise; and I being a man, protect her I should, as far as necessary! I found myself wishing that we could upturn something pleasant to talk about!

The drooping round of my thoughts revolved over and over, and I dozed, and kept dozing, until she spoke.

"Hadn't we better stop?"

That was a curious sensation. When I stared about, uncomprehending, my view was shut off by a whiteness, veiling the moon above and the earth below except immediately under my mule's hoofs.

"What's the matter?" I asked.

"The fog. I don't know where we are."

"Oh! I hadn't noticed."

"I don't think there's any use in riding on," she said. "We've lost our bearings."

"Yes, we'd better stop where we are," I agreed. "Then in the morning we can take stock."

She swung off before I had awkwardly dismounted to help her. Her limbs faltered—my own were clamped by stiffness—and she staggered and collapsed with a little laugh.

"I'm tired," she confessed "Wait just a moment."

"You stay where you are," I ordered, staggering also as I hastily landed. "I'll make camp."

But she would have none of that; pleaded my one-handedness and insisted upon cooperating at the mules. The animals were staked out, fell to nibbling.

I sought a spot for our beds: laid down a buffalo robe for her and pushed her saddle as her pillow. She sat up with a sigh, tucking her skirt under her, and I folded the robe over.

Her face gazed up at me; she extended her hand.

"You are very kind sir," she said, in a smile that pathetically curved her lips. There, at my knees, she looked so worn, so slight, so childish, so in need of encouragement that all was well and that she had a friend to serve her, that with a rush of sudden sympathy I would—indeed I could have kissed her upon the forehead, if not upon the lips themselves.

It was an impulse well-nigh overmastering; an impulse that must have dazed me so that she saw or felt, for a tinge of pink swept into her skin; she withdrew her hand and settled composedly.

"Good-night. Please sleep. In the morning we'll reach the stage road and your troubles will be near the end."
