NO VACATION FOR YOUR SANITARY CONSCIENCE

Vacation time is here, and once again the call of the great outdoors is heard. The mountains, the rivers, the lakes, and the seashore are cast ing their magic spells. He is indeed beyond redemption who does not fall a willing victim to their enchantment. The lure of lavish nature has in it the promise of mental as well as physical reawakening. Those who answer her call must leave the cares and worries of their everyday lives behind. He obtains most from his vacation period who least heeds the demands of civilization.

There is one demand of civilization, however, which cannot be overlooked, for its neglect leads to illness, disease, and even death. SANITA TION must follow man wherever he goes. In order to enjoy a vacation to the utmost one must bring along his sanitary conscience; for unlike cares and worries, one's sanitary conscience cannot safely be left at home.

A person who brings his sanitary conscience along will see to it that all his excreta and wastes are properly disposed of, in order that they may not endanger the comforts and health of others. He will use great care in the choice of his drinking water. He will drink water of ques tionable purity only after it has been boiled or has been chemically treated. He will protect his food supply from flies and rodents.

If the vacationist is a tourist his sanitary conscience will demand that when he stop at a tourist camp he stop at one which has been approved by the state board of health. His sanitary conscience, moreover, will prompt him to help keep the camp in a clean, orderly, and sanitary condition. Should he run over to the seashore his sanitary conscience will rebel against promiscuous dumping of garbage or waste of any kind upon the beach. That which he would not do at home his sanitary conscience would not permit him to do away from home.

Vacation time is here, and once again the call of the great outdoors is heard. When you take to the road be sure that your sanitary conscience accompanies you.-State Board
