In Confidence....

CONFESSIOIN-AND THE PENALTY

Dear Miss Flo:-

Mussolini.

Twenty-four or more

Yes.

When I was nineteen years old I fell in love with a man who succeeded in convincing me that love was only worth while when it was free. Before long I realized my mistake and determined to live right after that, and I about it. The woman, of course, feels have. . No one else knows my mistake [-not even my family. Now I am engaged to a man whom I love dearly. I wonder if I should tell him my past?

Yours is a problem which no advice of mine can help you solve, for as far as the woman is concerned in such cases, it is a question of being miserable if you do make confession, and miserable if you don't.

If you don't confess, at least you will be the only one who will be unhappy -and that unhappiness will not be lasting. If you do confess, the man you love will suffer with you, for even though he will forgive you, and marry you anyway, he will never forget. He will be haunted always by the memories of what you have told him. And he will have to be a bigger man than most men are if he doesn't reproach you with your past and remind you of it when he is angry with you. Ignorance May Mean Happiness question of right should enter into the and more careful in protecting your matter at all, for there is no more real NOTICE IS HEREBY GIVEN, That reason why a woman should confess bitter experience how easy it is for every detail of her past than there is why a man should tell her of every youth, when life and love are calling Lane as the administrator of the estate of Allen Rodehaver, deceased, and narrow path.

Few men are foolish enough to bare their past lives to the woman they frain from sharing their burden with sent the same properly verified to the administrator at the office of Frank DePue, attorney for the estate in him to, nor does she want him to, for holds its own secrets—and suffers its those things that would only mean torture to her. It is only when the case is reversed, and it is the woman who has a dark stain on her past life that she wonders if she should tell the man who wants to marry has that she must do so because of the double standard of morals, and she nearly always tells everything to the man before marriage.

Perhaps it is true that a couple who know the worst about each other start on their new life together with a firm foundation of honest understanding but certainly that understanding will not bring them closer together in atrection. Rather, it is an understanding that sweeps away the last illusion -and leaves them face to face with Frankly, I fail to see the wisdom of realistic facts. That little ghost of telling the man you love of your past. the past, once called into being, will never be entirely banished.

Forget the Past-Make the Future What you have done does not matter so much as what you are going to do. If your past life had in it something that would reach out and reflect in some way on the man you are going to marry, then you would be bound to tell him about it.

But yours was nothing but a folly committed in your youthful ignorance, and your tears of remorse have washed away your little sin. You will perhaps be a better wife because of it. Personally I do not believe the Certainly you will be a wiser mother a young girl to make a blunder in her
