UPPER WILLAMETTE

Chester Williams, who had a sunstroke Tuesday afternoon while running a tractor on the Matlock farm near Goshen was taken to his home in Sutherlin Wednesday. At last reports he was feeling much better but still very weak.

Fire of unknown origin completely destroyed the barn of Henry Knowles Friday night about 8:30. The family were about to retire when the Knowles boy, who was out in front of the house, saw flames come out of the roof of the barn. The fire was already under way and the walls soon collapsed. A chicken coop also burned. There were 30 tons of hay, several hundred bushels of grain, several hogs and small pigs and considerable machinery. No insurance was carried and Mr. Knowles figures his loss is about $3000. As no one smokes at the Knowles ranch the origin of the fire is a mystery.

Quite a crowd gathered at the Wheeler ranch Saturday night August 20 to witness the burning of the old mill. Ice cream, pop, etc., were sold and it was voted to turn the proceeds of the evening over to the Knowles family whose barn burned Friday August 19.

INFANTILE PARALYSIS IS ON THE INCREASE

Eighty-two cases of epidemic poliomyelitis of infantile paralysis were reported to the California State Board of Health during the first two weeks of July. A few cases have been reported in Oregon. Infantile paralysis is an acute generalized infection due to a filterable virus, occurring both in epidemics and sporadically. The infective nature of the disease has been conclusively shown. The virus attacks the nervous system and persists in the nasal secretion for a long time. The paralysis may be preceded three or four days by nausea, vomiting, and fever. However, a child may go to bed apparently well, and wake up in the morning with paralysis and slight fever. The great majority of cases are found in children under five. Cases among persons over twenty are comparatively rare.

For the benefit of the public the following regulations for the control of infantile paralysis are published: The patient should be isolated as completely as possible in a clean, bare room, well screened to keep out insects. Visiting is not permitted, and only the necessary attendant should come in contact with the case. All discharges, including sputum, nasal secretions, urine and feces, should be thoroughly disinfected. Eating utensils should be boiled. Everything that comes in contact with the patient should be sterilized. Towels, bed linen, and other fabrics should be boiled or dipped in a strong germicidal solution. The period at which isolation should be maintained cannot be guessed at. Children are not permitted to return to school for at least three weeks.

In the presence of an epidemic, street and house dust should be kept down by sprinkling, oiling, or other means employed for this purpose. Dust should be allayed whether there is an epidemic or not. During epidemics children should be kept away from public gatherings.

The possibility of infantile paralysis being contracted from milk emphasizes the importance of the prophylactic value of pasteurized milk.

The summer prevalence and the rural distribution of this disease are disturbing factors with regard to summer vacations. The only safe rule is to avoid places where localized outbreaks are in progress. The fact, however, that infantile paralysis does not usually strike the same place in epidemic form two succeeding seasons makes such places reasonably safe the year following an epidemic.—State Board of Health.
