Personally Prescribed

The druggist was becoming disgusted. He had been explaining and pricing dozens of articles to the shopper who really didn't want to buy anything at all.

Finally she picked up a bottle.

"Is this Pest Exterminator guaranteed?" she asked. "How is it applied?" "You take a teaspoonful every half hour, ma'am."

UPPER WILLAMETTE

Union high school No. 1 opened Monday September 26 with an enrollment of 82. Several students are expected to enter during the coming few weeks. Several are still working in the prune orchards. The new building is completed with the exception of the furnace which is expected to arrive soon. Some of the blackboards have to be put in yet and the chairs for the class rooms have not arrived. Registration took place Monday, assignment of lessons Tuesday, and Wednesday classes began. Many of the students have been unable to get books as the supply of several books has run out in Eugene. The new school bell which was presented to the school by F. F. Cooper began its career Monday morning.

Bert John and family, who have been living at Trent have moved on to the ranch of F. F. Cooper at Pleasant Hill. Mr. John is janitor for the high school this year.

Pleasant Hill public school which was to have opened Monday September 26 will not start until Monday October 3. The opening was postponed to allow the children to gather the prune crop.

The recent rains have done much damage to the prunes, many of them are rotting on the ground.

FARM MARKET REVIEW

(O. A. C. Extension Service)

Grain: The market for both wheat and rye held generally steady last week. Barley and oats tended upward. There was no material change in the general wheat market situation. Movement to market was about twice as heavy as last year. Mills were the principal buyers. Substantial premiums were paid for high protein. The supply of high grade soft winter wheat continues below the demand in St. Louis territory and soft wheat is being shipped from Pacific Northwest territory to supplement the supply. Reports of corn weather were mixed and prices fluctuated widely. Barley and oats tended upward on light receipts and an active demand. The flax market weakened by increased domestic receipts and lower foreign prices.

Wool: Reports indicate continued strength in the wool situation.

Butter: The market closed at San Francisco last Saturday with 92 score bringing 47 cents a pound. Eastern markets advanced on short supplies of fancy butter and light receipts of all butter. Movement out of storage was larger than last year and December future options at Chicago were advanced one cent. Pastures are short and concentrates higher than last year but there is an abundance of hay and silage in prospect in eastern dairy districts.

Livestock: Lamb prices advanced last week on moderate receipts and good demand. Cattle markets were slightly unsettled but strong. Eastern hog markets were lower on heavy receipts.

Feeds: The feed market was generally firm with demand more active, but wheat feeds went lower. Alfalfa meal continued quite firm with an excellent demand at Kansas City where choice meal was quoted $2.00 above number one which was worth $22.50.

FARM REMINDERS

A succession of shrubs line Oregon lanes and highways throughout the entire year and contribute largely to the attractiveness of the landscapes. A number of the more popular of these shrubs beginning with the rhododendron and red currant have been listed by the botanist of the agricultural college. The list has been given out by Dr. Helen M. Gilkey of the botany department.

The grain certification work of Oregon farmers in cooperation with specialists of the Agricultural college for the last nine years has resulted in a distinct improvement in the type of grain grown, the experiment station reports. Any farmer interested in producing maximum yields of good quality grain is interested either in the production or use of certified seed.

The bacterial nature of western filbert blight in Oregon was discovered by the experiment station several years ago. It was found that in the winter the bacteria are in the old cankers on twigs or stems. In some way, probably by insects, they gain entrance in some of the buds which are often completely killed. They may also be transferred in pruning as all young and tender parts are susceptible.

Growth and bearing of young filbert groves in Oregon are encouraging features of the filbert industry as reported from the experiment station. Many four and five year old filbert groves bore good crops of fine nuts. While by no means great profits producers, they are indications of what may be expected when plantings are kept growing steadily and vigorously.

European canker of apple and pear trees frequently gains a foothold through winter injured bark, reports S. M. Zeller, plant pathologist with the Oregon experiment station. It can be successfully excluded, however, by keeping such injured places and other exposed wood coated with bordeaux paint, made by stirring raw linseed oil into dry bordeaux mixture.

A home-made machine for cleaning spray residue from apples will be on display at the Oregon State fair this year as part of the experiment station exhibit. This machine was designed by Harry Hartman, professor of pomology at the state college. Any one interested in building his own machine may get plans and specifications for the building of this device free by writing to the experiment station.

Successful Oregon farmers spray their cane fruit plantings with bordeaux mixture before the steady fall rains set in, reports the experiment station. A number of troublesome fungi that work on raspberries and loganberries during the fall to produce spur and cane blights can be controlled in this way.

Application of super-phosphate fertilizer to winter growing crops such as broccoli aids the plants in resisting low temperatures, according to farmers in some sections of Oregon, who have tried it. This resistance may be brought about by hastening maturity, but probably more so by reason of increasing the concentration of the cell solution of the plants, says Dr. W. L. Powers, head of the soils department at the experiment station.
