

Mrs. Doane Has Guests—Mrs. Bert Doane has as dinner guests one day this week Mr. and Mrs. H. E. Williams, Eugene; Mr. and Mrs. Oren Henderson, Springfield, and Mr. and Mrs. R. E. Love, Jasper.

Mrs. Kester Improves—Mrs. Kester, Portland, sister-in-law of Dr. Eugene Kester of this city, is much improved following a major operation at the Pacific Christian hospital.

Dr. Van Valzah Better—Dr. C. G. Van Valzah, who was for some time in the Pacific Christian hospital, has sufficiently recovered to leave the hospital. He was taken sick while visiting at Kitson Springs from his Portland home recently.

Still Has Old Car—Dr. Eugene Kester is not the owner of a new Studebaker Commander Six, despite rumors on the street today. "The Commander Six the physician drove to his office this morning was merely loaned to him by the man who is repairing his old car, the doctor said.

Marriage Licenses Issued

During the past week marriage licenses have been issued by the county clerk to the following: Newell Sherman and Lois Baker, both of Eugene; Eugene Knowles, Trent, and Florence Hills, Pongra; Raymond Rice and Doris Clearwater, both of Portland; Keith Bond and Ruth Campbell, both of Eugene; Claud Scott and Ellen Nelsen, both of Junction City; William Billmire and Vegma Sprague, both of Eugene; Clement Cummins and Mildred Hughes, both of Eugene.

Returns from Grants Pass—E. B. Morrison is back today from Grants Pass, where he visited mining properties. Mr. and Mrs. R. E. Mosher, who made the trip with him, will remain there for some time working.

Goes to Portland—Mr. Arthur Taylor of the White Front grocery went to Portland for a few days.

many of the things he yearned to say. "That wasn't just fair, Nance," he managed, at last.

She tossed her head. "I knew you before she knew there was such a person in existence as Eddie Forbes. If she has any sense, this won't make any difference. Hang it, I don't see the harm in kissing an old friend so long as it's open and aboveboard! If she hasn't any sense—" Uplifted eyebrows finished the sentence.

Eddie's anger grew. Nance had come with a generous motive. She had heard that he was in difficulties; she wanted to relieve those difficulties. Yet the result of her visit had been to widen the rapidly closing chasm between Patsy and himself. She had thrown in that invitation to call as a deliberate and gratuitous barb.

"You didn't play fair, Nance," he said coldly. "What you've done is to make things a little more difficult for me."

"I'm sorry," she replied, simply, and contrition came into her lovely eyes. She sighed. Her hands dropped from his shoulders. "I think I'll be going. But if you need money, or—or—me." A lovely red swept over her face. She turned swiftly without another word and ran to her car, which was standing in front of the house. There came the roar of its powerful engine as she, too, drove toward Long Portage.

Eddie tried to busy himself with his task of smoothing and planing. But the work had lost its savor. He wanted to get to Patsy Jane as soon as possible, to explain Nance's visit and her impulsive kiss. Yet for several hours, pride held him back. For, he told himself, Pat had taken too much for granted and had run away without giving him a chance. He should let her get over her huffy fit, that's all. He should let her come to her senses—

By three o'clock he deemed that she should have come to her senses, for he drove toward, taking the curves of the sandy road at a reckless speed. His visit was fruitless. Mrs. Kihnan came to the door of her home in answer to her ring. She said briefly that Mrs. Forbes was away.

"Do you know when she'll be back?" he questioned, disappointedly.

"No, Mr. Forbes. She said to tell you not to wait."

Summer reached its crest, and the little, sheltered valleys about Long

Portage and out through the wilderness were alive with huckleberries. It was a good fruit season, for the rains had been plentiful, and had come at the right time. The rich, purple berries, each as large as the end of one's little finger, grew in prodigal profusion. The sturdy vines were bending beneath their weight.

Fortunately for Long Portage the crop was a failure elsewhere, and the berries brought a good price in Detroit and Chicago. The village was depopulated, for all those who could, left for the harvest. Skilled pickers made big money.

Many went out a dozen miles to camp in the more extensive patches. Others drove forth and back, morning and evening in their cars, the tonneau laden with spoils when they returned with the setting sun. Even horses and wagons were not despised, for some of the best berry patches were found on bumpy side roads, trapped with deep sand, where four-footed motive power was surest and safest.

The huckleberries gave Eddie a chance to earn extra money. He grasped it eagerly. Davenant was an enlightened rancher. He demanded except in cases of seasonal emergency, only eight hours daily. Eddie and some of the other hands rose at five and before, to get in a good two hours picking before breakfast. Then there were two hours in the evening, after which Eddie drove through the beautiful reluctant northern twilight to the buyer at the railroad express office, with his pick. The fast night train delivered the berries, the dew of secluded valleys still on them, at the markets next day.

There was a good patch of berries on Eddie's own quarter-section, near the mound. This he saved until the last. When everything on the other side of the creek within easy distance was exhausted he drove, early one morning, over to his own property.

The sand of the narrow road was damp. He noticed with surprise the clear-cut impression of motor-tires which turning from the highway, also entered the southern field of his land. He followed the track to the mound, and around the base.
