In Confidence....

By FLO

H. H. HAS LOVE— BUT LITTLE CASH

Dear Miss Flo:—

I have been going with a wonderful girl for almost two years. While we have often talked of marriage, I have hesitated at an immediate wedding. Consequently, she believes that I do not love her—that I am only playing with her. The fact of the matter is, I am not sure of myself. I am not sure that I can support a wife, because my salary is quite small. We have never talked over the financial end of the subject, so I don't suppose my sweetheart has the slightest idea of how very small my salary is. I have tried several times to tell her, but somehow, my courage always fails me. I may be rather sentimental, but it seems to me the question of money should never enter into the question of love. Then, too, if she knows how darn small my salary is, I am afraid she will want to break-off. She has a very good position, and while I do not know just what her salary is, I do know that she always buys the best of everything. Therefore, I am quite sure that I could not support her and keep a home on my earnings. That is, I couldn't support her as well as she is supporting herself. When I tell her that we cannot get married for at least another year or two, she tells me that if I loved her, I wouldn't want to wait. I don't want to, but what's a fellow going to do?

a wife at all, and not being able to support her in the way she has been accustomed to, are two different things. If you are unable to support her, you would be nothing less than a cad to marry her. But if you are able to support her, even though it be on a smaller scale, I see no reason why you shouldn't marry her, telling her, of course, just how things stand. If she loves you, she may be willing to take a chance.

To a sentimental romantic person it may be rather a shock to be told that every girl should know the amount of her husband's pay check. Common sense and self-interest demand that a couple talk in terms of dollars before marriage. It is a great deal better to talk money before marriage than to learn after marriage that you cannot keep up a home.

I am not advocating that a man should not marry until he can support a wife in luxury. In fact, I think a few hard bumps will do a lot toward bringing them closer together. It doesn't take a fortune for a couple to marry on. Marriage, however, does mean making a home, and making a home means a pay check sufficient to cover the necessities with a few dollars left over to save for "a rainy day." There should be a frank discussion of finances before a wedding date is thought of.

—H. H.

Well, H. H., you do have your troubles, don't you? and of course, the only thing you can do is to talk things over with this wonderful girl. If she is as wonderful as you think, and we hope for your sake she is, she will understand, and perhaps if she likes her position, she will want to continue working after the wedding, in order to hasten the happy day. As for breaking off because of your small salary, if money means that much to her, it would be the wisest thing that could happen.

You know, H. H., there is no telling what women will do. You think she hasn't any idea of how small your salary is, but I have a hunch that if she has known you for two years, she knows a great deal more about your business affairs than you think she does. Naturally, she can't tell you about it. That's your job.

In the first place, there's a world of difference between two of your statements. Not being able to support

Class is Entertained

Mrs. A. B. Van Valzah entertained her Sunday school class at a delightful Halloween party at her home last Friday night. The Halloween motif was carried out in decorations and other features of the party, and games were enjoyed.

Mrs. Van Valzah teaches the young people's class in the Methodist church. About twelve attended.

Reception is Planned

A reception will be held at the Lincoln school Friday afternoon, given by the Parent-Teachers association in honor of new members of the organization. Several new names recently were added to the roster of the organization.

Rescott is Visitor—Robert Prescott of Eugene was a visitor in Springfield Monday. He is one of the new owners of the Rankin-Fry building, and looked over the property while here.
