CITATION

IN THE COUNTY COURT OF THE STATE OF OREGON FOR THE COUNTY OF LANE.
In the Matter of the Estate of Henry H. Cullen, deceased.
To Lula E. Cullen and William Roderick Cullen:
IN THE NAME OF THE STATE OF OREGON: You are hereby cited and required to appear in the County Court of the State of Oregon, for the County of Lane, at the Court Room thereof at Eugene, in the County of Lane, on the 16th day of December, 1927 at 10 o'clock in the forenoon of that day, then and there to show cause, if any you have, why the following described real property should not be sold at private sale by Henry E. Slattery, the administrator of the said estate, to make sufficient to pay funeral and other expenses as in the petition on file prayed for, to-wit: The North 66.6 feet of lot 4 in Block 18 in Fairmount, a part of the City of Eugene, Lane County, Oregon. This citation is first published in the Springfield News on Nov. 17, 1927.

Witness, The Hon. C. P. BARNARD, Judge of the County Court of the State of Oregon, for the County of Lane and the Seal of said County hereto affixed, the 17th day of November, 1927.
Attest: W. B. DILLARD, Clerk.
By EVA L. DUCKWORTH, Deputy.
N 17-24; D. 1-8-15

"BLACKSHEEP"

"We'd better part company right here!"
"How completely you misjudge me, Archie! There's a charm in you begotten of your very innocence and helplessness, and I should be very unhappy if we parted now. We've shared some danger together and in spite of your weaknesses I'm fond of you. And if I left you to your own devices something quite disastrous might happen to you."
The Governor was unconcernedly sketching one of the diagrams with which he seemed to visualize his plans. Archie was startled now to hear his companion muttering to himself.

of his hand, but somewhere in the Seventies he did for a moment lose track of the streets, and the car, swinging east, stopped midway of a block of handsome residences. There was still the chance that this was all by-play, a trick for concealing their arrival in town; but the footman was already ringing the bell of a house gushed in sight. The door was opened by a manservant, whose face expressed pleasure as the Governor passer him with all the airs of incontestable proprietorship.

"I think we may as well go at once to our rooms," he said. "You understand, Baring, that we dine at seven-thirty—places for three?"
"Very good, sir: I received your telegram."
On the third floor, Archie surveyed approvingly a lounging room, half library and half office.
He tottered toward a stand on which decanters, syphons, and a silver bowl of ice had been placed. He helped himself generously to Scotch; the Governor contented himself with a glass of mineral water—he never took anything else, he explained.

"Odd, but I've never used the stuff at all. Bless you, no fanatical notions on the subject. And now, my dear Archie"—he closed the door and turned on the fan—"you are my guest, in every sense my guest. It may have occurred to you that I may be an interloper here, but such is not the case. I own this house and the ground it stands on and everything in it. You are, of course, not a prisoner; not in any sense, and there's a telephone in your room by which you can talk to all the world quite freely,—no restrictions whatsoever.

"My name is not Saulsbury, of course, but something quite different. The servants in this house do not know my true name. They might, of course, work it out, for I pay taxes here, and my family history is spread in the public records, but the people you see about here are trained to curb their curiosity; I trust them as I trust you. They are all from under the crust—the man who met us at the station is a daring housebreaker; the chauffeur a second-story man; the butler is a thief. Down to the scullery maid, who was a clever shoplifter, all the servants are crooks I've picked up and installed here until they can do what Lenry's doing, invest their ill-gotten gains in some legitimate business. Baring has enough rewards hanging over him to make any one rich who can telephone his whereabouts to police headquarters in any town in America. As all branches of the profession are represented here by retainers repay my hospitality by keeping me in touch with their comrades everywhere."

"I suppose, I suppose," Archie timidly ventured, "you've told them about me?"
"Not a word! You will act exactly as though you were a visitor in the house of an old friend. And now I must go through this mail—I've a chap who collects my stuff from some of the unofficial post-offices up-state. The first room to the right is yours."

"You've got to admit the service in this house is excellent. If you don't mind we'll dress for dinner," remarked the Governor lounging in the doorway.
"I forgot to say that there's a lady dining with us—"

"A lady!" demanded Archie with a frown.
The Governor crossed the room, stared at the floor for a moment, and then said from the door:
"The lady, my dear boy, is my sister."

"Julia is usually very prompt, but she is motoring from Southampton and we must allow her the usual margin," the Governor remarked when they met in the drawing-room.
The clock had struck the three-quarters when they heard the annunciator tinkle followed by the opening of the front door. The Governor left the room with a bound and Archie heard distinctly his hearty greetings and a woman's subdued replies.
"I'm sorry to be late, but we had to change a tire. No, I'll leave my wraps here."
"Won't you be more comfortable without your hat?"
"No, I'll keep it; thanks!"

The door framed for a moment a young woman who in her instant's pause in the threshold seemed like a portrait figure suddenly come to life. She was taller than the Governor and carried herself with a suggestion of his authoritative bearing. Her face was a feminized version of the Governor's, exquisitely modeled and illuminated by dark eyes that swept Archie with a hasty inquiry from under the brim of a black picture hat.

"Julia, this is my friend, Mr. Conly."
Her "very glad, I'm sure," was uttered with reservations, but she smiled, a quick sad little smile.

The Governor had introduced her as Julia, carelessly, as though of course Archie knew the rest of it. The Governor asked prefunctorily about her drive into town, and whether it had been hot in the country. Dinner was announced immediately and they sat down at a round table whose centerpiece of sweet peas brought a coolness into the room.
It seemed to Archie that he met a puzzled look in Julia's eyes from time to time that she was trying to account for him, and her manner he thought slowly changed. Her first defensive hostility yielded to something much more amiable. It was as though she had reached a decision not wholly unflattering and might be a little sorry for her earlier attitude.

"Julia, if you brought those documents with you I'll take them up to my room and look them over. It's only a matter of my signature, isn't it? I'll be down at once."
"Very well; you will find them in my bag in the hall. I must start home very soon, you know."

"I had hoped you would spend the night here," said the Governor; "but if you won't I'm grateful even for this little glimpse."

The Governor left the room and reappeared with a small satchel, took out several bundles of legal papers and glanced at their superscriptions. In a moment they heard his quick step on the stairs.
"It is no doubt clear to you," Julia remarked, "that my brother prefers not to be alone with me."
"I rather surmised that," Archie replied with an ease he did not feel. He turned to drop his cigarette into the brass receiver at his elbow to avoid contact with her gaze, which was bent upon him disconcertingly.

"We have but a moment, and we must have a care not to seem to be confidential. He didn't close his door, I think."
