Capital's Police Women Stand High in First Aid

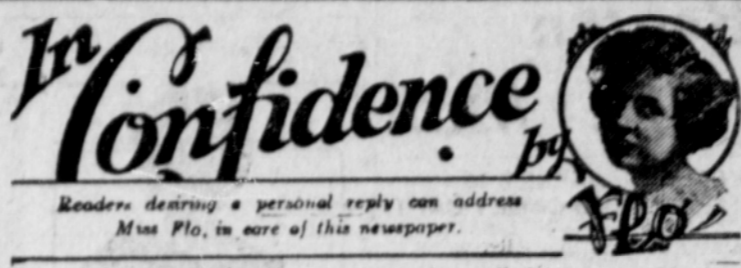

Members of the Women's Bureau of the District of Columbia police department recently completed the Red Cross first aid course. This is perhaps the first women's group of the kind to be awarded the special first aid arm insignia by the American Red Cross in token of completion of the training.
The Red Cross in the past year qualified 25,812 persons in first aid and awarded certificates to members of police and fire departments, industrial groups and utilities employees all over the United States.

Practical Pattern No. 1254

No wonder the smart woman insists on metal brocade and velvet for afternoon tea or bridge—no other combination could possibly equal it for luxury and smartness. Here it is in the two-piece style which everyone likes so well—the blouse of a rich metal cloth or lace and the skirt of transparent velvet which is also used for the V-neck that ties itself into a smart bow. Gold or silver brocade with black velvet is the most popular combination.

May be obtained in sizes 16 to 44. Size 36 requires 2 1/4 yards of 36 to 40 inch material for blouse and 1 1/4 yards for skirt and trimmings. Patterns will be delivered to any address upon a receipt of 25c. in cash or U. S. postage. Always mention size wanted. Address Pattern Department, "this newspaper."

ELOPEMENTS ARE DANGEROUS

Dear Miss Flo:—
I am eighteen years old, and very much in love with a young college student. He wants to give me an engagement ring for Christmas, but mother says she will not permit me to accept it. She says marriage is out of the question for a few years at least, and a long engagement isn't fair to either of us. I know I'll never love anybody else, so we are planning to elope. Of course we will have to keep our marriage a secret until Jack is able to support me. Do you think we will be happy? Don't you think I am old enough to know my own mind and know what I want?
Joan.

I am afraid, my dear, that your chances for happiness are very slight indeed if you go through with your present plan. For while you are positive you know what you want now—and no doubt you do—it is quite likely you will not want it five years from now. You will change so much in that time that you may laugh at the idea of ever having thought of marrying Jack. Every day of the year you change in some way, and at the end of five years very little of the old Joan will be left. The things that appeal to you at eighteen will seem positively stupid to you at twenty-five. New experiences and a wider companionship will broaden your viewpoint, and your mind will naturally readjust itself to the changes.

This is even more true of the boy than the girl. It is generally admitted that a boy of twenty-one is not fully developed mentally. Jack is going to college. He will be caught up in a new current—foreign to you. He will meet new people—brilliant men—he will have new experiences—his life will be colorful—and the changes in him will be greater than in you. At the end of the college days he may regard the love affair with you as "puppy love."

You are much too young to marry. You have a lot of good fun coming to you yet before you accept the responsibilities of marriage. When you have had years of happy girlhood—carefree gaiety—when you are able mentally and physically to consider the responsibilities of being a wife and mother, then, and not before, are you old enough to marry. It is neither fair nor unselfish of Jack to ask you to give up your own youth and sit at home—a married woman—waiting for him to graduate and give you a home of your own. And if you do marry him—and find at the end of four years—that he does not love you—then who is to blame? Married life lasts a great deal longer than youth. Why make it longer?

Eloping is dangerous, and as a general thing, not conducive to happiness, even when those eloping are not impetuous youngsters. The wedding day belongs to the girl—and her marriage should be bright, cheerful and happy. The wedding should be sacred and beautiful—not merely a legal form. It should inspire both the girl and the man with a fuller understanding of the obligations they undertake and memories of an ugly little office, with an indifferent Justice of the Peace officiating, and curious strangers acting as witnesses, are not particularly inspiring. In after years it has the appearance of being tawdry and futile.

When Jack has completed his education and is able financially to undertake the responsibilities of marriage—and the new Jack and the new Joan still love each other—then get married, and share your happiness with your parents and your friends. Start your new life together without haste or confusion—openly and honestly—and it will always be a beautiful memory.

You are only eighteen now and it may be that you will be in love several times before you finally marry. The very fact that you ask for advice shows that you are not sure that you are right—or that you are justified in disobeying your parents. Talk it over with Jack and try to make him understand your viewpoint. Second thought never hurt any one. And in five years—when you are happily married—
