WINTER WEATHER HITS SPRINGFIELD DISTRICT

Springfield people are just beginning to warm up following a siege of winter weather which featured the passing of 1927 and the arrival of 1928 last week-end.

Temperatures dropped as low as 20 degrees above during the cold spell, and about an inch and one-half of snow blanketed the ground. A few minor accidents resulted from the condition of the highways, but as a whole this district escaped much of the trouble which the winter spell brought parts of the state farther north.

The Willamette river still is considerably higher than it was as a result of the melting snow.
