JUSTICE WONDERS IF WOULD-BE NEWLYWEDS CHANGED THEIR MIND

Awakened near midnight by a young man posing as the envoy of a pair of would-be newlyweds, Justice of the Peace R. W. Smith put a crimp in the proceedings when he suggested that a marriage license was a rather important—in fact indispensable part of such matters. And now the justice has a problem—

Did they change their minds? Anyhow, the next day came and went without a return of the couple.

The young man came to Justice Smith's house about midnight Tuesday, and asked Mr. Smith if he would marry a couple. The justice agreed, and then asked if the pair had a license. The young man said he did not know a license was necessary, nor did he know whether the couple had one.

He went out to the car, where the brave young pair was waiting in the dark. Soon he returned, saying that a license was absent, and that possibly they would return later with the necessary document.

But the night and Wednesday came and went, with no wedding so far as Mr. Smith was concerned. And he is wondering is a few hours waiting could have flavored love with discretion.

Proper pruning is one of the most effective means of increasing the size and sugar contents of the Italian Prune, the production committee of the Northwest Dried Prune Convention declared in making its report at the Corvallis meeting last June. The committee added that pruning materially aids in reducing fluctuations in yields and variations in sizes, as well as in maintaining vigor of the trees.
