"Regret that I must act on my promise of several weeks ago and use the address given in confidence. Encouraged to believe that the patient will recover. Suggest, however, that you come at once.'

He and Congdon were at the supper table when he received the answer: "Thank you. I am just leaving. J. V. D. G."

But when he the vestibule of the train his apprehensions vanished. The poise, the serenity of temper, an unquestioning acceptance of the fate that played their first meeting struck him anew. "Our patient is doing well. The news is all good," he said at once. "I felt that it would be; I couldn't ally! believe that this was the end!"

Putney and his wife had moved to Heart O' Dreams for a few days. It would be a second honeymoon, Putney said. Mrs. Graybill was introduced into the hotel without embarrassment. She won Dr. Reynolds' heart by the brevity of her questions, and expressed her satisfaction with everything that had been done. When she came down to the dining-room for luncheon she avoided all reference to the sick man. In her way she was as remarkable as the Governor himself.

"I've never been in these parts before," Julia remarked to Archie; "I should be glad if you'd show me the We might take a walk a little beach.

The hour in which he waited for her tried his soul. The Governor was the one man who had ever roused in him a deep affection and the dread finding that under his flippancy, his half-earnest, helf-boyish makebelieve devotion to the folk of the underworld, he was really an irredeemable rogue, tortured him. "I'm going to ask you to bear with all the fact that a man had died as me," said Mrs Graybill when they the result. They understood as fully reached the shore, "if I seem to be making this as easy for myself as possible. I know that my brother cares a great deal for you. He sent me little notes now and then-he always did that, though the intervals were sometimes long; I know that he would want you to know. Things have reached a point where if he lives he will tell you himself." "My brother is Philip Van Doren, never a closer tie between brother and sister. I married his most intimate friend. My husband betrayed him; it was the breach of trust in which they were jointly liable. It was not merely a theft, it was a gross, dastardly thing, without a single mitigating circumstance. My husband killed himself.' "It broke Philip's heart; it broke his spirit! It destroyed his generous faith in all men. He was a brilliant student in college and promised to go far in the law; but he felt keenly the dishonor. The financial part of it he of course took care of; that was the least of it. There was always a strain of mysticism in him; and he had gone deeply into astrology and things like that; and when the dark hour came he pretended to find consolation in them. He was born under an evil star, he said, and would not be free of its spell until he had passed through a period of servitude. It sounds like instanity, but it was only a grim ironic distortion of his reason. He said that if honor was so poor a thing he would seek a world that knew no honor. I dread to think how he has spent these years!

Grover. Eliphalet Congdon had been Importuning Archie to release him, but it had seemed wise to give the erratic millionaire more time in which to meditate upon his sins.

When the tug returned Archie found that the old gentleman had taken advantage of a day's parole in Chicago to do considerable shopping. In a new suit of clothes he really looked as Perky said, like a white man; but the change in him was not merely as to his outward person. He opened a bag on deck and displayed with pride a pearl necklace he had purchased for his daughter-in-law, a handsome watch for young Edith and an other for his grandson, whom Mrs. Congdon had left with a friend in the east

"You call it an affair! Calamity would be a better term for it."

This silenced him for some time. As she walked before him, carrying her head high, his heart ached with love for her. It would be best perhaps not to urge her further; to wait until the camp closed and then see her ening. Archie was still troubled by in a different environment. It might be that his sister would arrange this for him and he took courage from the thought.

"Thank you," cried Archie, "Oh, thank you for that! And one thing more; would you advise me to summon the patient's sister?"

"Yes. There being always the uncertainties, I should certainly do so. I'll run up in my launch this evening."

One of the questions that troubled Archie not a little was how the detective was to be disposed of. Leary grinned broadly when Archie gave voice to his thoughts.

Mrs. Putney Congdon more than justified the impression he had formed of her in their encounter in Central Park by the manner in which she heard his story. He told it with all
