OVERCOME SELF-CONSCIOUSNESS. FORGET IT!

Dear Miss Flo:— Please tell me how I can overcome self-consciousness. I am a young man of twenty-two—fairly intelligent but people with whom I come in contact would never guess it—for when I am out I'm afraid to open my mouth for fear I'll say the wrong thing. I seldom think of anything worth saying—but when I do, I don't know how to start. How can I overcome this handicap? N. K.

For goodness sake—don't take it so seriously! Nobody is going to remember a year from now, or a week from now, or even a day from now, if you do say the wrong thing. There isn't anybody living who can boast never to have dropped some untimely remark that he immediately regretted—and blushed many times remembering it.

Don't think about it. Don't make such an effort to talk, and you will find it a great deal easier. Every time you have stage-fright when you are in a crowd—start talking. Say something—say anything. It's the only way to get over your trouble.

Talk until you get your balance—and don't ask yourself if it is worth while saying. Remember that all the original things have been said ages ago. Don't avoid people. Talk to everybody. Each contact will develop a new idea and it won't be long until you will talk with confidence and your ideas will flow so rapidly you will have to talk long and fast to keep up with them.

A question is always a good talk-starter—and the weather is as good a topic of conversation as it ever was.

And don't forget for a moment—that it is just as much of an art to be a good listener as it is to be a brilliant conversationalist.

Dear Miss Flo:—

For the last year and a half I have been going with a man who works in my office. We have always been very good friends until recently. Now he is going out with another girl in the office. Please tell me what to do. We aren't in love with each other—but I miss his companionship.

If he has lost interest in you, there isn't much you can do to revive it. It is evident he has transferred his affections—and if you are wise, you will let it go at that. And who knows—perhaps when he sees that you don't mind his indifference he will be more interested in you than ever.

McMULLIN IS ON SQUAD AT WILLAMETTE VARSITY

Willamette University, Salem, Ore., March 15—As the smack of the horsehide on the mitt echoes out over Sweetland field at Willamette where the varsity nine is making ready for a heavy season of baseball, Merle McMullin, Sophomore from Springfield, is in place as shortstop, working off the rough corners and settling down into his regular form of ball. Earlier in the season McMullin played fullback on the Bearcat football line; but after being out of training for a time, he is back again, availing himself of the opportunity in the university physical education major to participate in more than one sport.
