Red Hair and Blue Sea

At the tree Olive stood among uneasy guards, hands bound behind him, feet tied, noosing hemp drawn taut across its limb.

"Look at him—yer rope round his neck," Burke reproached. "Waiting, poor sucker, for y'tset him free. This here kanaka was good enough 'dile for you. But when it comes yer turn?" He laughed with brutal insinuation. She could scarcely fulfil the sours. But at last she grasped out: "Let—him—go."

Olive knew not the words but he knew their meaning. "Never!" he cried. "Tell her—tell her she shall not give herself for me."

At this moment, however, there rose from the outskirts of the crowd, a startled warning: "Zapanee. . . . Zapanee, he come!"

Burke, with an oath, snatched up his binoculars. Three boats from the Oksyama were already close. Rifles bristled.

While the others ran, Ponape Burke was carried only a step or two by the animal instinct of self-preservation. Then he stopped, started on, turned back.

Horror sat upon that visage; ludicrous, yet doubly intense by the very inadequacy of its expression. He snatched forth the revolver. He could battle for her. Yes, kill half a dozen of those Japs. But—to what avail? Fighting or no, he'd lose her.

"I can't go on without you," he burst forth, "and they won't let me go on with you. But if I can't live, I can die—with you."

He broke into the old laugh. The boats, as one frantic glance told his victim, were still too far to aid. The natives all had fled. Only Olive remained; bound hand and foot, the rope from the noose dragging across the limb above.

Olive was writhing to under the sennit cords which bound his arms. Olive—blood dripping from wrists torn in his struggle—hurled himself against the madman. The concussion of his bulk threw Ponape back. The bullet which would have pierced Palmyra's brain flew harmlessly into space.

The islander, by a supreme effort, snapped his bindings. He seized the other. He crushed his master to him like a gorilla. But the hand that held the revolver was yet, for the moment free. It flashed in, the muzzle pressed against Olive's side. The hand, gripped convulsively, forced the hammer up toward its fatal bore.

But now, astonishingly, all movement ceased. Firing from a distance, someone had drilled Ponape Burke through his evil heart.

But, alas, the steel bullet had not stopped, its work performed. It had crashed on through the body of the heroic brown man who fought for her.

The girl shrieked out, fell fainting. And then, as these three lay there came a sound of hoofs, and a muddily foam-flecked horse plunged up the village path with John Thurston.

He sprang from his saddle, flung aside the gun, caught the unconscious girl up in his arms.

When Palmyra Tree at last opened her eyes, she gazed up at John Thurston for a bewildered moment. Side by side two bodies lay.

Palmyra snatched herself back from John as if his touch had burned. "And it was you," she cried rigid in horror, "you who fired? Oh," she wailed, "I cannot, cannot bear that it should have been you—you who killed Olive."

"But, Oh, no, no, no, lady," the surgeon interrupted in eager reassurance. "This native man is not dead."

She looked at that form in shuddering stupefaction. "Bullet knocked him out a little," explained the officer, "but it hit nothing to make this big man trouble. He will be something like when the prizefighter gets knocked to sleep on the jaw."

At this first sentence Palmyra's lips had parted in a gasp of relief. Now, in the reaction, she wavered, closed her eyes dizzily, put out toward Thurston a groping hand.

John caught her to him once more with the knowledge that that pathetic blind groping had been for him. With her face upturned to his, appealing, close, Thurston, in that great yearning so long denied, could not resist; would, despite the grinning audience, have kissed her again and again.

But Commander Sakamoto, of an ever tactful race, was quick with a command which forced his unwilling men to the right-about; then chased the giggling villagers home with the sword of a samurai.

A burial detail had carried Ponape Burke forever away; Ponape, who had staked all—and lost all.

"And when," demanded John of Palmyra on the third day after; "and when shall the wedding be?"

"The wedding," ordained this girl, "must take place before we leave the island. I insist, for one thing, despite"
