Giant Appetite Fails to Save Bartender

St. Louis, Mar. 7 (AC)—One of the most amusing stories arising from Prohibition is that of the customer in a speakeasy who ate thirteen sandwiches in an effort to keep his friend, Walter Bernwell, the bartender, from arrest. A Prohibition agent, seeing the patron putting $2 on the counter, asked what he was buying with it.

"Sandwiches," he said. "Two dollars worth of sandwiches?" asked the agent, incredulous. "That's right," the customer said, "I'm hungry."

The bartender piled up sandwiches on the bar, and the patron managed to eat thirteen. But anyway the Prohibition agent produced a search warrant, seized a quantity of liquor and arrested the bartended. The customer looked gloomy indeed.
