ECKERSON PLANS AIRPORT IN CITY

Major Requests That Springfield Lease Him Site on Industrial Tract Near Maple School for Landing Field and Flying School.

Springfield is to have an air port if the plans of Major G. H. Eckerson, formerly of the Hobi airways, Eugene, materialize. Major Eckerson has selected a piece of land on the industrial tract near the Maple school east of the city for a flying field and has requested the city for a lease.

Major Eckerson is now at Klamath Falls on business and expects to return in a week to begin the development of a field here. He inspected the tract here last Friday and later notified the industrial committee that it was suitable for his needs.

The piece selected is 1200 feet wide and may be extended to 2000 to 3000 feet long. On account of the ground being very level little preparation will be necessary to develop an air port here, with the exception of graveling the runways.

Major Eckerson, who is widely known in aviation circles and has the reputation of being one of the best flyers on the coast, will conduct a flying school here. He plans to build a hangar and bring an airplane on the field here, in the next few weeks. The convenient location on the McKenzie highway and close to the city makes the industrial tract a good place to establish a flying field and school. Springfield is also in a more nearly direct line for north and south flying from Portland to California than cities west of here, which was the chief factor in picking this city as a site for the air mail beacon light by the federal government.
