

Back to the Great Open Spaces Says Texas Guinan

New York Night Club Queen Advises People to Stay In the Country

"Why, even the call of Broadway came from the farm—'Hey! Hey!'" says Texas Guinan. "I'm a ranch product myself and certainly can teach farmers how to sow wild oats. Of course—and she winked—"I cater to the gentleman farmer."

"You hear a lot about farm relief these days.

"The only thing anybody read in the McNary-Haugen Bill was the part about farm relief.

"It's the farmer who puts the president in the chair. No class of people approaches the farmer in influence."

Texas Guinan is the most dazzling spectacle in all New York, the most talked of woman in the world today, perhaps because she symbolizes the gay elements of city life as does no one else.

Originator of the phrase "Hello, sucker," which is the form of her greeting to night club patrons, and "Give the Little Girl a hand"—her bid for applause—she has fascinated all Manhattan by her personality.

And yet Texas Guinan, the greatest whoopee artist of them all, often thinks longingly of the farm. In an exclusive interview with a representative of the Autocaster News Service, she told of her early life on a ranch near Waco, Texas, a ranch of tremendous proportions, "unpaid for until the time I left it."

"Just get me somebody — she leaned forward—"with a lot of dough and a nice farm already paid for and invite me to go there and rest—oh baby!"

"Oh, the farm people make their own laws. But I guess they'd keep an eye on me on the farm, too. They'd better."

"I've been made the football of the prohibition law, you know—and I've never had a drink in my life.

"It's easy to be a good girl on the farm but you've got to be a good girl in the city to get away with it!"

"It's great to live on a farm if you can afford to. What with radios and telephones, and all the rest of it, a farm's a country home now.

"When I was out in the great open spaces we had no such conveniences.

"In those days people wanted to cut away from the farm on account of loneliness—today on the farm you can hear the ball games, inauguration ceremonies and everything you want over the radio and have a better time than you would have on the scene.

"In my mail I get thousands of letters from kids saying 'I've got talent.' If they all came to the city there wouldn't be enough room to hold 'em.

"If the person intending to leave the farm saw written before her a record of what she had to do and the hard knocks she would have to experience before succeeding, not one in one thousand would have the nerve to chance it.

"Of course I've trained a lot of kids who came to me from the farm and are now married to millionaires, but for every one who makes a big hit hundreds are disappointed.

"And the farm is the hearth of the American home.

"I know people who come from farms who can never wait to get back to them. And say, it's wonderful to drive in your own farm gates—see the well cultivated ground—the fine home that's all paid for, and say: 'Gee, I'm glad to get away from the city mess.' Farms aren't uncomfortable any more. People go to them to recuperate from illness.

"There's got to be somebody on the farm for everyone out of it, and it's just as great to work on the farm as it is to be in the swim of things in the city."

Calles and Gomez Drop Politics For Farming

Two Leading World Figures Lured from Activities by Call of Rural Life

One of the strangest phenomena of the past few months is the sudden decision of two prominent world-figures to turn from their national activities to devote themselves to agricultural work.

Gen. Plutarco Elias Calles, Minister of War and former President of Mexico, and Gen. Juan Vincente Gomez, who declined re-election to the presidency of Venezuela, are both to devote their time to farming.

Gen. Gomez is 72 years of age and has been in power in Venezuela since 1909. He is popular as a president, as proven by the constancy with which the people have supported him in his campaigns. Re-elected, he has declined to serve, saying that he prefers to return to agricultural work. In which he was formerly engaged.

Gen. Gomez prefers to farm rather than do anything else, but served his country as President in order to be of service when he was needed. he is free to retire to the obscurity of his farm, where he finds his greatest happiness.

The Minister of War of Mexico Gen. Calles, has resigned his portfolio and will retire to the Pacific countryside to rest. Some of his time he will devote to the simple farm life of his ranch near Mexico City, exchanging, thus, his sword for a ploughshare.

The resignation of Calles closed nearly three months of emergency service to the government which he headed for four years and left last December after the designation of Emilio Portes Gil as provisional president and his successor.

At the time he declaimed intention of participating further in Mexican political life, except in the extent of emergency. The emergency arose during a recent military revolt, which Calles as Minister of War brought to its termination within two months.
