THE "BIG-STICK" HAS GONE

A few years ago the government was out to bust the trust, prevent interlocking directories and in general prevent alliances whereby competition might in any way be restrained. Now the "big stick" has been laid aside and in its place has come a spirit of mutual co-operation between government and business.

This change of attitude has been brought about by the public. The politicians have learned that it does not pay to run on platforms which simply attack business, because the public, in addition to becoming part owners of business enterprises through the purchase of securities, has a better understanding of the responsibilities of business.

A candidate running on a platform to put out of business some corporation in which you may own stock does not get your vote any more than if he were out to wreck your private business or position.

This new system is but a modern method of production and distribution and by its large scale operation the necessities and comforts of life are brought more easily in reach of the public. The well being of mankind is actually advanced so long as the management of these large enterprises do not abuse the power and privileges they have been given. However, to prevent this, we have set up commissions and made rules to control the activities of those large corporations.

NEW STYLES IN FINANCE

Lately the United States steel corporation, large chain stores and other large corporations have taken advantage of favorable conditions to get out of debt. Instead of borrowing money from the bankers, who are good to them when times are so they do not need the money and strict when they do need it, these corporations have gone to the public with stock and bond issues.

In the future the public is going to be the chief place to finance large undertakings. When we see J. P. Morgan, the largest banker in the world, and head of the steel corporation, going somewhere else besides his banks for money, then we must conclude the styles in finance are changing.

Voters at school elections this year must be registered the same as at elections. This law, which was passed by the people in 1927 is now in effect. Any duly registered voter can vote at school elections for directors, however, where bonds are voted only taxpayers of the district are now allowed to vote.

They have been growing strawberries by electric light in Paris. The cost by this method is only $5 a berry, so the demand has not been great.

It has been a million dollar rain even if it came in little bits. The Oregon country never looked better than right now.

It is a question now whether a tariff on wheat or a law eliminating radio interference would offer the most farm relief.

PEOPLE COMING TO OREGON

During May 75 families from out the state came to Oregon and invested over a quarter million dollars. California, the leading state in the west, is also a leader when it comes to sending her people to Oregon. From the State Chamber of Commerce bulletin we find some of the listing as follows:

Herbert W. Deitz, Sacramento, California, bought in May 115 acres near Eugene, improved, and will continue in dairy business. J. J. Pelton, Modesto, California, bought 100 acres near Mt. Angel, an improved dairy ranch, stocked with good cattle. Charles Churchill, Bickleton, Washington, purchased the M. J. Arnel farm near Eugene, for $18,000. George Hill, Atlantic City, N. J., purchased the highly improved Maaha prune orchard near Nyssa of 120 acres for $85,000. H. E. Thomas, Illinois, visited Portland in June, 1928 and returned last month and purchased a $17,000 home in Portland. Wilbur Smith, California, bought 200 acres for resort center on Rogue River north of Medford for $25,000. Joseph Rose, California, bought 10 acres and service station south of Ashland for $4,000. Martin Aarhouse, Loyalton, California, bought 5 acres near Hillsboro for $5,500.

Whether the spectacular outbreak of gun play now and then are the last of the wild west age or the outbursts of the moving picture area is hard to tell. Two young men met four Seattle high school students on the street the other night. They said they wanted to see some dancing as they pulled out shooting irons and began to burn up the sidewalk. The students did not have a chance to dance before they were hit with bits of flying concrete and metal.

Editorial Comment

FORD SEES AVIATION GROWTH

"There are sound economic reasons for believing that a great epoch of air transportation is being born. I believe that 1928 will go down in history as the year in which American business accepted the airplane." That is the opinion of Edsel B. Ford as expressed in Nation's Business. "A new commercial and industrial era," he says, "is beginning with the airplane just as surely as new eras began with steamships, railroads and automobiles. Distrust and catastrophes marked the early days of those eras and be fogged the true pictures of their futures."

"Likewise the heroic hazards of the war, the daring of pioneer fliers and the foolish use of antiquated machines has diverted public opinion from the true achievements in air transportation. People remember these things and they know also the spectacular events that took place at Mineola, Le Bourget, Croydon and Templehof, but so many do not realize the realities of aviation."

"A recent survey of American commercial flying companies disclosed that there were but two fatalities to passengers in 5,000,000 miles of flight. Five million miles is hard to grasp—it is more than 200 times around the earth at the equator."

"The arrival of this new and tremendous force in our national life does not mean the obsolescence of the old means of transportation. It foretells only the extension of them and a great increase in man's power to cover great distances swiftly and unerringly. Aviation holds for us another safe and comfortable way to save time."

"The time is near when commerce and industry may cease to depend on the thousands concentrated in cities. This swifter, more flexible means of transportation may mean the decentralization of some of the great metropolitan areas. A man may commute 100 miles to his business. Whatever may be its effect on the cities, the airplane will certainly be important to inland towns."

A PERSON'S INFLUENCE (Ellensburg Record)

It is often said that the accomplishments of a person's life are marked by the influence that life has on the other lives with whom he or she comes in contact. There are a lot of people who applaud Almie Semple McPherson for her evangelistic work in Los Angeles, and call her a great spiritual leader. Others will call attention to the trail of misfortune that seems to come to those who surround her.

First, might be mentioned the disappearance on the beach and the search for her in the waters by those who believed in her so implicitly.

Second, her radio operator friend Kenneth Crimston, has been divorced by his wife for the part he played in Almie's life.

Third, Judge Hardy, another friend, was charged on impeachment charges.

Fourth, her mother has left the temple and is now being sued for breach of promise in a sensational suit brought by a Seattle evangelist.

Fifth, her lawyer has now been divorced by his wife.
