

"VOICE OF YOUTH"
HEARD AT McDONALD

"The voice of youth."
With these words, Robert Milton, noted New York stage director and an expert with a long background of study in stage elocution, described the voice of Clara Bow, Paramount's flaming haired screen star.
"Miss Bow's voice has the full range from the soft-toned, forceful alto of drama to the excited higher notes of youth in revelry, and all in perfect modulation," Milton declared as he heard her during the production of "The Wild Party," her first all dialog picture, which comes to the McDonald theater for three days beginning Thursday.
"It is the voice of a great actress, perfect for the stage and therefore perfect for the microphones of an all-talking picture."
"The Wild Party" was directed by Dorothy Arzner. Frederic March is Miss Bow's leading man.
A dramatic phase of Hollywood's critical attention to talking pictures was uncovered shortly after the completion of George Bancroft's new all-talking picture, "Thunderbolt," the McDonald theater feature for next week, when that star announced the dissolution of a national body of investigators, founded by himself, to report in opinions reflecting on his first appearance in dialog films, "The Wolf of Wall Street."
In no other picture has there been so convincing a demonstration of the possibilities of the Vitaphone as in "The Desert Song," which comes to the McDonald theater on Tuesday, and which will go down in screen history as the first musical play to be transferred in its entirety to the motion picture screen.
