"COLLEGE LOVE" AT McDONALD THEATRE

Undergraduate humor, that effervescent, sparkling characteristic of youth, will be heard as well as seen on the screen for the first time in film history with the opening of Carl Laemmle, Jr.'s, feature length collegian musical comedy, "College Love," at the McDonald Theatre now.

This full-length climax of the popular short subjects created by this young film executive and directed by Nat Ross, brings to delighted audiences the rah, rah, rah of campus yells and the humor and drama of every phase of campus and fraternal life.

Ross has long been known as the "film college professor" because of his familiarity with every detail of college atmosphere, and Carl Laemmle Jr., as president emeritus of the same celluloid college for the same reason. Neither of them actually went to Ross becoming a director for Universal at the age of 19, and Laemmle, Jr. choosing a film career instead of a course at Princeton or Penn. But they have done so much work on college life in connection with the forty-odd shorter campus pictures which they have made, that both feel their collegiate education has been more intensive than could be obtained at any single school.

Lady's Beauty Secrets

By Helena Rubinstein

For as you were when first your eye I eyed, Such seems your beauty still.—Shakespeare.

Pure white or silver hair can be such beautiful hair! Soft, graceful, becoming, it frames any face in the most fittingly fashion. It dims facial lines almost magically and brings out the rosiest tints in the skin.

Just now it is extremely fashionable to have silver or snow-white hair. And it is often worn short, appropriately waved and dressed, with a very lovely effect.

But short or long, the white or silver-gray head needs more than ordinary care to keep it lovely. Unless it is properly shampooed, rinsed, dried and waved, it often becomes dry and yellowish or streaked.

Here is a particularly good shampoo for this type of hair: Slive a cake of pure Castile soap and mix with it one-half ounce of potassium carbonate and three ounces of water. Let simmer until thoroughly dissolved, then add one ounce of glycerine. Blend and add more water to the mixture if necessary. Shampoo in the usual fashion.

Be very careful to rinse out the soap in several clear rinsing waters. Then give the hair a final rinse in a basin of water to which a few drops of French bluing have been added. But take care not to get too much of the bluing in the water.

Recently I saw a very pretty young woman whose prematurely white hair had evidently just been given a bluing rinse. Under her bright red hat it looked distinctly blue in color. The effect was weird and not at all attractive as so many startling effects may be.

In drying white hair avoid strong heat. This rule applies to all types of hair, but for gray or white hair, which is usually inclined to be dry or brittle, it is doubly important. To dry it well, gently rub the hair and scalp with soft, warm, Turkish towels to absorb the moisture.

White or silver hair should never be waved with an hot iron, as the action of intense heat is yellowing. Instead use a warm iron, or wave with "water wave" combs.

HELENA RUBINSTEIN.
