FARM DESERTERS TO BE COUNTED IN CENSUS

"How are you going to keep 'em down on the farm?" This is the question that the census of 1930 may help to answer, if a recommendation of the advisory committee of experts of the Census Bureau is followed.

The suggestion is that in the census of 1930, there should be made the first comprehensive survey of migration from American farms to the industrial and business life of the cities.

The proposed examination would be confined to the simple question as to whether each person enumerated in the population count of the country had left the farm within the past year.

The information is expected by statistical experts not only to give an exact answer to the question of migration, but to pave the way for supplemental examination of the causes.

The information, it is declared, will provide opportunity for an answer to the question: "How are you going to keep 'em down on the farm?"

Census experts know that there has been a strong drift from the farm in the last decade, as revealed by the difference between rural and city population, but estimates have varied greatly.
