"HOW TO SEE PARIS" AT McDONALD THEATRE

Irene Rich, who in 1918 started her motion picture career as an extra and became the leading woman for the late Dustin Farnum and other screen luminaries, portrays the role of Mrs. Pike Peters in "They Had to See Paris," starring Will Rogers in his first all talking picture for Fox Movietone. Rogers personally recommended Miss Rich for the part of his wife in the picture.

In the role of Pike Peters, a contented garage owner at Claymore, Oklahoma, until his oil well comes in and makes him suddenly rich, Will Rogers' troubles begin when his wife insists on taking the family to Paris. The production was directed by Frank Borzage, with Bernard Steele as stage director. Homer Crox wrote the story, and Owen Davis, Sr., wrote the dialogue of "They Had to See Paris," which is now being shown at the Fox McDonald, in Eugene.

Those inimitable screen favorites who wrote film history in "7th Heaven" and "Street Angel"—Charles Farrell and Janet Gaynor—come back to patrons of the McDonald Theatre Sunday, for three days in their first talking picture, "Lucky Star." Tristram Tupper's notable story of a boy who turns his capabilities to useful creation, notwithstanding his physical handicap of useless legs as his heritage from the world war.

A little country maid—Janet Gaynor—changes from a roadside weed to a garden rose chiefly because she becomes imbued with the effervescent spirit of the young war derelict. She learns to love the crippled boy and he is reluctant to express the feeling in his heart for her because he realizes a man without legs is hardly a fit companion for a vibrant young girl. However, when he knows she faces peril—the trap of his former sergeant to gain an alliance under the guise of marriage—the cripple leaves his wheel chair, battles a blizzard and other obstacles to save the girl, and in so doing quits the wheel chair forever. From there it is but a step to marriage with the girl he couldn't ask before he was a cripple.

In addition to the speaking performances of the co-stars, Miss Gaynor and Farrell, the supporting players who speak their parts on Fox movietone include Guinn Williams and Hedwiga Reicher.
