GUNMAN'S BLUFF

less; when the question was repeated he had an inspiration.
"Can you tell me if Mr. Maddison's flat is occupied — is his servant there?"
The tone of the man changed.
"Who are you, and why do you want to know that?"
Luke rang off without explanation. He might have told the man who he was, but he was chary of confiding in servants, and it was particularly undesirable that he should betray his presence in London to anybody but Jack.
And then a thought struck him and he called the number of his own flat. He waited fully five minutes listening to the faint buzz of the call, and then the operator said:
"I'm sorry sir, there is no reply from that number."
Luke made a slow way to the Mall and walked slowly toward Buckingham Palace, oblivious of the rain. There was only one thing to be done, and by the time he had reached the end of the Mall he had made his plans. He had often remarked jokingly how easy it was to burgle his flat. Recently there had been erected a new fire escape at the back of the block and access to the yard was by no means difficult. He could climb the wall from the mews which ran to the back of the flat, and he knew exactly how the window could be forced.

Margaret Maddison was preparing for bed when the street bell rang. She opened the door of her room and listened; somebody was talking in the hall below; she heard her footman's voice and a deeper one, and then somebody said:
"You had better go up and tell the lady. I must see her. . . Scotland Yard."
She sent her maid down to find out what was the matter, and in a few minutes the girl came back.
"It's an inspector from Scotland Yard, madam. He wants to see you on a matter of importance."
"Is it Mr. Bird?" she asked.
It was not Bird but a stranger, who introduced himself as Divisional Inspector Gorton.
"I'm sorry to bother you at this time of night, Mrs. Maddison, but we have a report sent to us by the servant of Mr. Hulbert, the solicitor—I believe he is your husband's solicitor?"
She nodded and drew a quick breath.
"Is anything wrong—I mean, with Mr. Maddison?"
"No, ma'am, it's not serious—in fact it may be nothing at all. But this valet of Mr. Hulbert says that he had an enquiry from a strange man tonight as to whether your husband's flat was occupied—he also said that you had the key of the flat."
Margaret nodded. The key had been in her possession since a few days after Luke's departure. His man had brought it; it was at that moment in her desk.
"I understand Mr. Maddison is abroad?"
"Yes, he is at Ronda," she said quickly. "You can have the key."
Inspector Gorton hesitated.
"I'd rather you came with us, madam. I promise you there's not the slightest danger, but we do not like searching houses unless there is a representative of the owner present."
"What do you expect to find? I'll come with pleasure," she said.
"You can wait outside in your car, madam. What do we expect to find? Well, there is a possibility that the man who called up intended burglarizing the flat, and we want to be on the safe side."
She went upstairs and finished dressing, and then accompanied the inspector to the street. A car was drawn up, with two or three men sitting in the back, and she was invited to the seat with the driver.
They came very quickly to the entrance of Luke's flat.
No, I'll come up with you. I've only been in it twice, but I'll probably be able to help you find your way about."
The inspector sent one of his men to search the apartment; and then suddenly he sniffed.
"Somebody's been smoking a cigar here, and smoking it recently."
Margaret too had smelled the faint fragrance. At that moment the detective sent to look in the kitchen came running back.
"The window's been forced," he said.
Gorton nodded. Evidently he expected to hear this.
"Which is Mr. Maddison's room?"
Margaret pointed. A key was already inserted in the lock. The detective turned the handle. The door did not move. It was bolted on the inside.
"Out you come son! It's a cop!"
He turned to the girl.
"You'd better go downstairs, Mrs.

Maddison—we're going to break in the door."

Luke Maddison, standing on the other side of the door, listening, heard the words and gasped. His wife was there—the one person in the world who must not see him!
With her heart beating a little faster, Margaret passed down the stairs. When she reached the street she found that the driver of the police car has summoned a taxi, which was drawn up behind the tender.
"Is anybody there, miss," asked a police officer.
"Yes, I think there is! At least the inspector thinks so."
"You'd better get into the cab, miss, said the officer. I suppose Mr. Gorton expects a bit of a fight."
"Do you often have cases like this?"
"About every other day. We're one of the Flying Squads."
Apparently it was quite usual for the Squad to be called to buildings where suspected burglars were. They moved with the celerity of a fire engine and were as alert.
"Inspector Gorton waited until Margaret had left the building, and then he rapped again on the panel.
"Open this door."
The bolt was slipped back, the door flung open. The inspector saw a man with grimy face and disordered clothing, standing in the doorway, and instantly he was seized.
Luke was taken aback. He had expected an opportunity of parrying, even of taking the detective into his confidence. Resenting the sudden seizure, he tried to shake off the detaining hands, and in the next instant was flung violently to the floor. Somebody passed their hands scientifically behind his coat.
"He's got a gun," said a voice.
The pistol was passed to Inspector Gorton.

"I can explain the gun," said Luke.
"I dare say you can," Gorton opened the automatic and detached the magazine.
"Loaded—you'll get a ten stretch for this, my lad. Pan him, one of you, he may have another."
In two minutes Luke was searched and everything taken from him.
"Where did you get this money?" asked the inspector.
"It was given to me—began Luke, and there was a roar of laughter.
"What is this?" said Gorton, examining something in his hand.
That morning, before he had left on his expedition, Mrs. Fraser had given him a little blue covered book.
"A driving license, eh? You were not by any chance driving a car today around Bond street, were you?"
Luke's heart sank within him. And then he heard one of the detective's say:
"That's the fellow! He had a heard this afternoon. I saw him driving with a woman in the park."
He whispered something to Gorton and the inspector nodded. All the time Luke was thinking rapidly. That simple explanation of his was no longer possible. If he declared himself to be Luke Maddison, he must also explain what he had been doing since he disappeared. The realization of that came with shocking emphasis. And he knew that below, Margaret was waiting and would recognize him in spite of his moustach.
Ahead of him was the open door leading to the hall. To the right the little room he had used as a dressing room. The window was right above the first landing of the fire escape. Luke had a horror of fires, and it was his amusement to plan out how he would escape from a burning building. If he could get to that room. It did not seem possible. Somebody spoke from the landing outside. It was the hall porter, who had called to discover what the commotion was. The two detectives who were guarding the door turned their backs for a moment, and in that instant Luke Maddison leaped. He was something of an athlete; had played for his fifteen at college, and had nothing to learn about the art of avoiding a tackle. He dashed through the door of the dressing room, banged it shut, and shot the bolt as the weight of two men was flung against it.

This was no moment for caution. He flung up the window and his legs went out almost in one motion. In another second he dropped into the darkness. He had calculated well. The steel platform of the fire escape clanged under his feet. In another instant he was flying down the steps and was over the wall before the first of the detectives had reached the head of the escape.
A man was lounging in the mews; he turned with a shout as Luke dropped. But Luke was off like the wind. His long stay in the hospital had thrown him out of condition, but he had all the technique of the runner. As he emerged from the narrow entrance of the mews he saw a cab passing and leaped on the running board.

"Look here," said a man to the foreman builder, "can you give me a definite date on which this house will be completed? You see I'm getting married when it is ready."
"Right," said the foreman, "you can leave it to me. I'll see that the job is spun out as long as possible."
