Forty-foot-high sand dunes moving 25 or 30 feet a year threaten to destroy central Oregon's "lost forest," a four-mile-square tract of pine timber in the isolated interior of Lake county, more than 30 miles distant from the Paulina mountain timber belt. The Rogue river valley one-crop strawberry yield has suffered a loss of at least 50 per cent, according to growers, as a result of continued cold and wet weather. However, the one-crop berry in the valley is planted only for barrelling, while the ever-bearing varieties are planted for market, and with intensive irrigation the ever-bearing will make a heavy crop until late next fall, which will overcome the loss to the early crop.

Because of uncertain market conditions Marion county cherry growers are planning to establish a maraschino plant for the barrelling of Royal Annes. Growers say such a plan was necessary for the protection of their interests.

The Jackson County Game Protective association will oppose the granting of permits for the construction of any power dams in the Rogue river or the taking of water for any purpose other than irrigation, that will reduce the stream flow.
