LOW SCORES ARE MADE BY LOCAL PLAYERS ON MINIATURE GOLF COURSE

Many local people took advantage of invitations to try out the new Wee Wee golf course Thursday evening and most of those who played their first round on the course expressed complete satisfaction with the newest form of recreation and entertainment which has been brought to Springfield by George Kendell and George Carson.

Charles Cornell won the honor of making the first hole-in-one on the course. He dropped the ball into the cup on the sixth hole with only one stroke. Mrs. Vern Wolley still retains her record which she established last week when she made four hole-in-ones during one game.

W. C. Wright held the low score for the course with a total of 43 until the first of the week when George Carson completed the course with a total of 42 strokes. This is only two above par.

Many players have won free games for hole-in-ones on the first and 18th holes. The managers announce that they will continue to all four free games to each person making one of these holes.

CIVIL SERVICE EXAM RETURNS TO BE LATE

It will probably be a month or more before returns will be received from the United States Civil Service bureau on the examination papers which local people wrote last Saturday, according to F. B. Hamlin, postmaster. The papers of the persons seeking places on the eligibility list have all been sent to Washington, D. C., and when they have been graded they will be returned. All those who made averages above 70 will have their names placed on the eligibility list.

"WHITE DAYS" TERRORIZE AVIATORS AT SOUTH POLE

"White Days" were the terror of aviators who flew their planes in the uncharted territory around the South Pole with the Rear Admiral Richard E. Byrd expedition. The dramatic film-record of the expedition, "With Byrd at the South Pole," which will show at the Colonial theatre, starting Sunday for three days, has scenes of these flyers battling strange weather conditions.

"White Days" came when the sky was overcast. The horizon would disappear completely and the flyers could not tell their altitude due to the absence of anything but the snow. There were no shadows in the blinding light. Men, walking along the snow, might fall into a hole or stumble over a drift without having seen them at all. On such days, everyone who could stayed indoors.

Such weather, together with storms and fog, was usually predicted by the expedition weather-man, who studied meteorological conditions for nine months before the polar flight was attempted. Although there were only twenty days of sunshine that summer, these were all accurately charted, predicted and used for important flights.

TWO AUTO ACCIDENTS IN VICINITY SUNDAY

One man was seriously injured and five other people were bruised and shocked in two major automobile accidents in this vicinity last Sunday. One automobile containing three men went off the grade on the Willamette highway near Oakridge breaking several ribs for O. M. McGee and badly shaking up Leonard Foster and Glenn Johnson, others in the machine. The men turned out of the center of the road to avoid striking a horse when they went over the bank.

Miss Ruth Kneeland and her nephew, Gerald Stone landed in the waters of the McKenzie river Sunday evening when the automobile which she was driving to Eugene from her parents, Mr. and Mrs. William F. Kneeland, summer home at Leaburg. Miss Kneeland turned the automobile to avoid striking a piece of road machinery and the car slid off the curve into the river. They were not injured other than a few minor scratches.
