NAMING THE BBIDGE

The Eugene Chamber of Commerce is backing a movement to name the Springfield bridge after H. B. Van Duzer chairman of the highway commission. We have the utmost respect for Mr. Van Duzer and his great service to the state, but it does not seem quite fitting to us for the highway commission to name a structure after one of its present members. It would a more lasting monument and finer tribute if an act of this kind were done by some succeeding commission in appreciation of Mr. Van Duzer's splendid service.

If we feel like naming the Springfield bridge after someone to perpetuate a memory, let it be the late Governor I. L. aPterson, in whose administration it was built and one of whose last spublic acts was to dedicate the Springfield bridge.

A LITTLE MORE AND MORE

The Yakima valley is perhaps the most prosperous place in the Northwest at present. Yakima has grown and the smaller cities of the valley as well have made substantial gains. The basis of this growth and prosperity is agriculture even at this time when farming is not paying so well. Agriculture in the final analysis must be the basis on which Lane county will grow the other day I saw entering it a man whose of color on the Christmas scene. A little more care in cultivation and preparation for market of a little better article a little better salesmanship and a little more faith and loyalty on the part of the Oregon buying public would work wonders in this Oregon country.

THE AIRWAY

After floating down the Willamette valley, down the Columbia and over Puget Sound in the air we have come to the conclusioon that there is only one way to travel-by airplane. Without physical effort or being jostled about as in ground travel, one floats along as nature in the car. unfolds large, delightful panoramas, and is as fresh when arriving at the destinations hun-

Not only does the plane travel three or four times as fast as does automobile or train but it goes in a straight line, saving much distance. From the air the highways and railroads in Oregon and Washington look crooked enough to put a kink in a snake's back as one crosses and recrosses them in air travel.

"Watch Tacoma Grow", used to be the slogan in Washington when the writer was a boy. Tacoma has grown some since then but nothing like it was expected before Seattle boomed. "Tacoma is broke and don't know it," said a the city's high tax rate was driving out industry. (A familiar sound here in Oregon.) "What about your cheap power bringing them in," we querried. He smiled and said "Cheap power is being paid for by taxation." Assessments and liens, he complained, were eating up property values. Water, sewer, street, alley and sidewalk liens in many cases amount to more than the if the land were given away, according to the taxpayer. Whether or not this man was wholly

MAY TAX MUNICIPAL UTILITIES

Regular taxes on municipal property used for commercial purposes is proposed in a bill to be introduced in the Washington legislature. This bill is aimed at the large properties in public utilities of Seattle and Tacoma. Other parts of the state now believe that their taxes are higher by reason of the heavy exemptions of these municipal properties. If they can muster the strength outside of these areas this bill will likely become a law, it is said. Aside from equalizing tax burdens this bill should put municipal properties in the right light. After the taxes are paid everyone will know whether the public plant s making a real saving over private owned beautiful Yuletide custom originated utilities.
