WHAT HAS GONE BEFORE

Giles Chitttenham swears to avenge the death of his young half-brother Rodney, driven to suicide by the love of his love. He will make Julie love him, then throw her aside as she threw Rodney. He meets her in Switzerland, goes with her to the hotel on the St. Bernard Pass, and succeeds in winning her love. To his amazement, he discovers that he has fallen overwhelmingly in love with her himself! And he is married, to an American girl with whom he has nothing in common.

Then he discovers that this girl is not the same Julie Farrow who ruined Rodney, but her cousin of the same name. She scorns him when he confesses his love and his inability to marry her. They meet later in London. Another man, Lawrence Schofield wants to marry her, in spite of her wild life.

Through his friend Lombard, Giles Chitttenham meets the "other Julie," the notorious woman who had ruined Rodney's life. She tells him that she is going to die; the doctors have given her up as incurable and she is leaving England. She is worried about her cousin, the girl Chitttenham loves. That Julie—his Julie—is going in fast company, among them a common American girl named Sadie Barrow.

And Sadie Barrow is Giles Chitttenham's wife. He did not know that she was in England. That night he meets her at a party at his mother's house. They pretend to be strangers. Giles learns that Sadie Barrow, his wife, has gone in for spiritualism and is attending seances by a medium named Chrver.

He calls on Julie, who is cold to him. He reproaches her for her reckless life. They quarrel, and she leaves with Lawrence Schofield. Her friend, Jim Lennox, tells Giles that Julie really loves him. Lombard calls on him and says he is in need of money. He threatens that if Chitttenham does not give him money he will spread the tale that he and Julie had spent the night together at St. Bernard Pass. Giles is indignant and shows Lombard out. Later Julie and Schofield go to a movie together and the pictures remind Julie of the Alps. She mentions about being at St. Bernard and Schofield becomes suspicious. On the way home they get a newspaper which contains the news of the death abroad of the other Julie. At her flat she finds Chitttenham waiting for her. She confesses to him that she loves him.

NOW GO ON WITH THE STORY

"You can't say it!" Julie... With a fierce little movement he drew her into his arms and kissed her lips.

"I love you," he whispered. "I've never loved any one but you. Forgive me, Julie."

She put her hands against his chest, trying to hold him from her.

"Forgive you? And then what?" she asked hoarsely. She began to cry, softly and brokenly. "You might leave me alone—you might leave me alone," she sobbed, helplessly.

She knew she had reached the end of her endurance. She knew that if she gave in to him now there would be no retracing her steps. She tried to think of Lawrence Schofield—tried to believe that he was far the better man of the two, and that with him she would stand a greater chance of happiness, but common-sense and logic died against the magic of Chitttenham's arms and the touch of his lips. She only knew that during all the weeks since they parted in Switzerland, she had ached for this moment, dreamed of it and longed for it, and that now, in spite of her proud defiance, it had come, and when Chitttenham asked again:

"Do you love me?—do you want me after all, Julie?" she had no answer.

She let him draw her closely into his arms, and when he pressed her head down against his shoulder, she closed her eyes with a little sigh of spent resignation.

It was a long time before either of them spoke again. Chitttenham did not attempt to kiss her, he just held her in his arms, his cheek against her hair, as if she had been a tired child who had come to him for comfort and protection.

It was Julie who moved first.

"Bim will be in soon. Poor Bim, I've been such a beast to her lately."

She drew a little back from him, looking at him with eyes that were all wet and ashamed, and yet happier than he had seen them since that night in Switzerland.

It was typical of Julie that now she had given in, she was ready to acknowledge herself fully beaten. With Chitttenham's first kiss she put the past behind her and kept her eyes closed to the future. For the moment the present was all sufficient. The great ache and unhappiness of her heart had been taken away; he was here and he loved her. The happiness of that knowledge and the relief of her own admission that she loved him, for a little while blinded her to everything else.

"Bim is away—" Chitttenham said. "I rang her up before I came here. She was called out of town—I forget her soft hair and her eyes fell.

"Would you care well enough for that... if there was no other way, Julie?"

For a moment she was silent, then with a swift little gesture she turned to him, hiding her face against his breast.

It was two o'clock before Giles thought of leaving the flat.

"Such a scandal!" he teased Julie. "Neither of us would have a shred of reputation if our best and dearest friends knew how abominably we have been behaving."

Julie made a little grimace.

"I haven't any best and dearest friends except Bim—" she answered, and then abruptly: "Giles, what do you think of Sadie?"

"Sadie—" He was glad that as her cheek was resting against his shoulder, she could not see his face. It seemed an ill omen that at this moment she should speak of his wife. He avoided a deliberate answer.

"What a question! I hardly know what to say," he said lightly.

"I only asked because she has spoken about you several times. I think she rather likes you."

"Nonsense!"

His voice sounded almost angry and Julie looked up at him in surprise.

"Don't you want her to like you? She and I are great friends. I prefer her to any one I have met since—" She stopped with a little shrug of her shoulders.

"Since you and I met on the top of the world," Giles added for her.

It was nearly three in the morning when he left the flat, and the streets were silent and deserted as he walked away through the darkness, passing for a moment to look back at the lighted window where Julie stood with her face pressed to the pane to catch a last glimpse of him.

Behind him was the sound of other steps, a little slower than his, and yet in some strange way seeming deliberately to be dogging him.

Chitttenham glanced over his shoulder, irritatingly conscious of being followed.

A taxicab on the outlook for a late fare turned a corner, and Giles hailed it. At all events it would put an end once and for all to his interested follower. As he slammed up the door he glanced backwards along the road the way he had come.

The man was passing beneath a street lamp, and in the sudden light his figure seemed strangely familiar, although for the moment Chitttenham could not place the resemblance.

The taxicab moved away and then all at once he knew—it was Lombard! That was the resemblance he had seen—Harry Lombard.

For an instant he was conscious of angry premonition; what did it mean?—then he laughed at himself! The idea was preposterous! Why should Lombard have followed him? He remembered their last meeting—and Lombard's detestable insinuations.

Chitttenham's face grew grim.

Supposing Lombard had been waiting outside Julie's flat during the past five hours?

When Chitttenham was dressing in the morning his mother rang through on the phone.

"I only rang up to ask if you will come this afternoon."

"Why do you want me to come? You know I'm an unbeliever."

There was a little hesitation before the plaintive voice came again.

"To tell you the truth, I'm just a tiny bit nervous! I've never been mixed up in anything of the kind before, and I thought with you there—"

"The evil spirits couldn't get you, eh?—don't worry—" Giles laughed. "I meant to come anyway."

"And, Giles—in case you're angry at meeting her again after what happened the other night—Miss Farrow is coming! I know I said I wouldn't have her in the house any more, but after all, one must be broad-minded—" Giles guffawed.

"It takes all sorts to make a world," his mother went on. "So you will be nice and polite to her, won't you, dear?"

"I think I can safely promise you that."

He smiled to himself as he hung up the receiver. It seemed absurd that his mother should have thought it necessary to ask him to be polite to Julie.

He had hardly finished dressing when a message came to say that Lombard was downstairs waiting to see him.

NEW TRAINS SCHEDULES ANNOUNCED AT DEPOT

Two new schedules for mainline trains of the Southern Pacific operating over the Cascade line were announced at the depot this week and are effective immediately. Train number 15 to Klamath Falls and points south will stop here when flagged to pick up passengers at 11:19 p. m. Train number 5 operating to California now stops at 1:37 p. m. The new schedules are the result of an effort being made to speed up the operating time to San Francisco and Los Angeles.
