WHAT HAS GONE BEFORE
Giles Chitttenham sets out to make Julie Farrow love him, intending to throw her over in revenge for the suicide of his brother Rodney, whom Julie cast off. He succeeds, but finds that he has fallen desperately in love with her himself. When he discovers that it was not this Julie Farrow, but her cousin of the same name, who had driven his brother to death. But Giles is married, to an American girl named Sadie Barrow, with whom he has not lived for a long time. Sadie unexpectedly turns up in London, at a party at Giles' mother's house, but both keep silent about their marriage.

Julie, disillusioned, enters into the wild night life of London to try to drown her anguish. Lawrence Schofield wants to marry her. Lombard who had first introduced her to Chitttenham, demands money from Giles with the threat that if he is not paid he will tell Schofield that Chitttenham and Julie spent the night together on the St. Bernard Pass. Later Julie confesses to Chitttenham that she loves him.

At a spiritualist seance at Giles' mother's house Sadie Barrow, his wife, suddenly goes blind. She calls to him and he responds, revealing the fact that she is his wife. Julie, who has sent Schofield away because of her love for Chitttenham, goes home in despair.

NOW GO ON WITH THE STORY
Julie moved with difficulty. She was cold and aching in every limb. She slipped off her wet clothes and put on a warm dressing-gown, her hands were shaking with cold.

She was pouring the water from the kettle when a knock came on the front door—a heavy knock that sounded both urgent and insistent. Bim, perhaps! Julie put the kettle down and flew across the little hall. Bim, dear Bim. Julie felt as if already half her troubles were lifted from her as she drew back the latch—then she gave a little choking cry.

"You—!"
"Yes—you must let me come in, Julie," Chitttenham said, and without a word Julie stood aside. She was conscious instantly of something different—strange about him—something that killed both the mingled hope and anger that struggled for supremacy in her heart. She felt that if she went to his arms she would be repulsed—that if she showed him bitter scorn it would leave him unmoved—that nothing could touch him.

"I had to come—I'm sorry if you are angry with me—but I had to come—just to say good-bye—"
He turned and half raised his head, looking at Julie. Then suddenly his face changed—it was as if the strange-ness were wiped out of it in a single flash giving place to such a look of unutterable pain that Julie caught her breath in an involuntary cry.

"To say good-bye—?"
"Yes—he took a quick step towards her and then stopped—"Sadie is blind," he said.
Julie stared at him, her eyes blank, her lips parted; then after a long moment: "What do you mean?" she whispered.

Chitttenham made a little impatient gesture.
"Just that—what I have said, she is blind—apparently she has felt it coming and been dreading it for months. That is why she came from America without telling me—she went to see some German specialist—I don't know yet what he told her, she was too ill and frightened to be very coherent. And then this fellow Chrysler on top of it all—you heard what he said about some one in the room never seeing the sunshine again. Didn't he speak of blindness—darkness—God knows what! The fellow showed he had locked up. Sadie took it to herself, of course, and the sudden shock finished it; perhaps it would have happened anyway, the doctor thinks so, but even he cannot tell, he says she may temporarily recover her sight—it she doesn't—"

He stopped abruptly, and Julie said in a shaking voice:
"How awful! How perfectly awful!"
So it was. She felt shocked, stunned and yet it was quite impartially, every other emotion was clouded over, stifled by those first words which Chitttenham had spoken to her.

"I had to come, just to say good-bye."
What had he meant by that? Good-bye! How would they ever say good-bye after last night? He had said then that they would never part again. Chitttenham went on:
"I was sure you would understand what a difference it makes, I was sure you would try to help me, Julie—dear! You see, she hasn't any one but me, you see, there are some things it's impossible for a man to do when a woman's ill—and frightened—I couldn't leave her now, how could I? You see—you wouldn't wish it, would you? It would be like—like trampling a pledged to her by honor. And yet now that Julie had told him to go—he broke out passionately.

"How could you think of marrying Schofield? What happiness would it be for you if you don't love him—"

"I don't expect to be happy," Julie laughed shakily. "Anyway, it cannot matter to you any longer. Please go away and leave me."

"Julie!" he said pleadingly. She said nothing. She hardly seemed to be listening, and he let his arms fall from about her.

"I shall see you tomorrow."
Still no answer, and after a moment he went out into the little hall and opened the front door.

He was so sure she would call to him, perhaps run after him. He was so sure that in a moment she would be in his arms, her lips crushed against his—he counted the seconds feverishly by his heart-beats.

But Julie did not move, and she gave no sign.

Chitttenham looked back. "Julie!"

He waited a moment, but the silence remained unbroken, and he went out of the flat, shutting the door behind him.

It seemed to Julie that she stood for hours, leaning against the wall, her body so tired that it was too much effort even to move over to the fire and a comfortable chair. Her head ached miserably. With a supreme effort she dragged herself across the room to the fire. It had burnt down, and she replenished it with shaking hands. She felt as if already a lifetime had passed since Chitttenham came to the flat, and yet only a moment ago he had been there with her, so close that she had but to put out her hand to touch him, and now he had gone, back to Sadie, back to his wife!

"I will never willingly see him again," Julie told herself passionately. "He has deceived me twice. I will never forgive him as long as I live."
She got up almost violently as though driven by the sudden reaction of thought.

She would send at once to Schofield. She would not lose a moment.

She went to the phone and called his number, but it was only after a long time that the hotel people could give her any news of him.

He was out at the moment, they said, but he was certainly returning that night.

There was a little pause—then: "Mr. Schofield is leaving London early tomorrow morning."

"Leaving—?"
Julie felt as if her last anchor had been torn from her—the waves of misery and utter loneliness seemed to beat up afresh all round her. The voice at the other end of the phone asked politely if a message could be taken.

"No—oh, no thank you."
Julie hung up the receiver and turned away. Lawrence was leaving London, leaving her!—she was seized with exaggerated panic. What was to become of her? Even Bim was weary of her, there was no place for her in the world. But Lawrence had loved her, must surely still love her. She remembered the despair in his eyes when she told him she would not marry him.

If she could only see him for a moment she was confident that everything would be all right—to see him, just to see him! She felt like a child left alone in the dark, straining every nerve to get to the one person who can take away dread and the desolate sense of loneliness.

She took off her loose gown and dressed again with shaking fingers, she was still very cold, but her face and head felt burning.

She would put herself beyond Chitttenham's reach, tomorrow when he came he should find it too late.

If Lawrence would take her away tonight she would go with him. She was tired of hoping for things that never came true, afraid of a love that brought with it only pain. She went out into the wet, chilly night and took a taxi. She drove straight to the hotel where Lawrence was staying. No, he was not in yet, and they could not say at what hour he would be returning. It was past nine then.

"I'll wait a little while and see if Mr. Schofield returns," Julie said.

The minutes ticked away, and later she supposed that she must have fallen into a stupor, out of which she was roused with a start to the sound of a chiming clock. Julie walked across to the porter.

"I cannot wait any longer, I will leave a note for Mr. Schofield."
