WHAT HAS GONE BEFORE
Giles Chitttenham sets out to make Julie Farrow live him, intending to throw her over in revenge for the suicide of his brother Rodney, whom Julie cast off. He succeeds, but finds that he has fallen desperately in love with her himself. When he discovers that it was not this Julie Farrow, but her cousin of the same name, who had driven his brother to death. But Giles is married, to an American girl named Sadie Barrow, with whom he has not lived for a long time. Sadie unexpectedly turns up in London, at a party at Giles' mother's house, but both keep silent about their marriage.
Julie, disillusioned, enters into the wild night life of London to try to drown her anguish. Lawrence Schofield wants to marry her. Lombard who had first introduced her to Chitttenham, demands money from Giles with the threat that if he is not paid he will tell Schofield that Chitttenham and Julie spent the night together on the St. Bernard Pass. Later Julie confesses to Chitttenham that she loves him.
At a spiritualist seance at Giles' mother's house Sadie Barrow, his wife, suddenly goes blind. She calls to him and he responds, revealing the fact that she is his wife. Julie, who has sent Schofield away because of her love for Chitttenham, goes home in despair. Chitttenham follows her, but she sends him away and decides she will accept Schofield. She goes to Schofield's hotel. He is out, but she leaves a note with him.
NOW GO ON WITH THE STORY

He took her to a desk and gave her paper and a pen.
Julie wrote a few hurried lines.
"I didn't mean it, Lawrence dear. I want you to come back to me. Please ring me in the morning—Julie."

It was a relief to have written that, and she half smiled as she thought how unnecessary it was to have added those last words. He would not ring her, he would come round, she was sure, he would come very early, perhaps even tonight if he was back in time, and then in the morning they would go away and make some sort of happiness together.

Julie tried hard not to think beyond tomorrow, but although she was so tired, and felt ready to drop, she could not sleep. She lay awake for hours listening to every sound.

In the early morning Julie dozed off to sleep, only waking when she heard the maid let herself into the flat and move about in the kitchen lighting the fire.

Presently she brought tea and a note. "It was lying on the mat when I came in, Miss."

Julie glanced at the handwriting, then sat up, her pulses jerking. It was from Lawrence Schofield. She was conscious of a warm glow of pleasure.

He loved her—it was something to be happy about in a world that held no real happiness. He must have brought it himself late last night. Perhaps, after all, it had been his footstep outside which she heard.

She broke open the seal, the envelope felt unusually bulky, she drew out its contents—her own note which she had written last night in the hotel lounge, torn across and across into minute pieces. That was all.

When Giles Chitttenham got back to his mother's house she met him in the hall.

"Your wife has been asking for you all the evening. I said I would send you up as soon as you came in."

As he went upstairs he could hear Sadie's voice, high-pitched and hysterical, and he stopped for a moment, his hand clutching the stair rail, a terrible sense of loss and irrevocable fate gripping his heart.

When she heard Chitttenham's voice, she turned her head towards the door, and stared at him with her wild, blind eyes.

"So you've come at last, have you?" she shrieked at him. "I suppose you've no use for me either, now I can't see."

She beat her hands frantically on the brass rail, and the nurse who had been standing beside her, caught and held them.

Sadie burst into wild sobbing.

"There's no hope for me, I know that I shall never see again as long as I live. I shall just sit here in the darkness till I die—till I die—and nobody cares—it doesn't matter to any one in all the world what becomes of me."

Giles crossed the room and touched her shoulder. "Sadie—"

She checked her sobbing with a sharp breath, and raised her face with pathetic eagerness to hear what he had to say. She tore her hands from the nurse's grasp, and groped in front of her till she touched Chitttenham's coat, then she clutched it feverishly and began sobbing once more.

"Don't leave me, Giles—be kind to me—after all, I am your wife—"

"Perhaps you would like me to explain, Mr. Chitttenham," Schofield went on and now every sneering word was a studied insult, "or will it be sufficient if I just call you the cad and the blackguard which I know you to be?"

"I can only conclude that you are drunk," said Giles, sharply, "and that being so, the kindest thing I can do is to ring and have you shown out of the house."

He took a step towards the bell, but Schofield was too quick for him—"That won't do," he said thickly.

"I've seen that trick tried before. I'm not drunk and you damn well know I'm not. You're a younger man than I am, Chitttenham, but I spoiled Lombard's beauty for him last night—he won't show his face amongst decent people again for some time to come, and I'll spoil yours if I—"

Chitttenham caught his upraised arm and held it in a grip of steel.

"Don't be a damned fool," he said roughly, "you're no match for me and you know you're not. If you've got anything to say, say it and be done. As far as Lombard goes, if you have given him a thrashing I'm in your debt, I owe him one myself—"

He released Schofield's arm, at the same time giving him a little push away from him, and for a moment the two men glared at one another silently, then Schofield broke down. He groped towards a chair and fell into it, hiding his face against his clenched hands. Giles watched him for a moment without speaking, then he fetched whiskey and soda from a side table.

"Help yourself," he said. "If you've got anything against me, let's talk it out sensibly, instead of flying at one another's throats like wild beasts. I know what Lombard has told you—he tried his blackmailing games on me, and when he found it was no use he threatened to go to you. Good God, Schofield, what sort of a fool are you to believe a lying hound like that?"

Schofield raised his haggard face. "What reason have I to disbelieve it?" he asked sullenly.

Giles shrugged his shoulders.

"Isn't your knowledge of Miss Farrow the best of all reasons?"

Schofield rose to his feet and began pacing up and down.

"Lombard was so sure—he had got every detail of the story—that you and Julie spent the night together at the St. Bernard Hotel—"

"So we did. It was impossible to get home. If all such unforeseen situations are given the same vile interpretation as you have given to this—"

Schofield's face flamed suddenly crimson.

"But I believe it!" he shouted. "I've always known that Julie was unhappy. She has hinted at trouble again and again. The reckless way she talks—all that pretended gaiety. It's never really deceived me though for her sake I've let her think it has—Lombard had the whole story pat. He even spoke of your brother's relations with Julie's cousin—and of his suicide. He said that you mistook Julie for her cousin—he said that you intended punishing her for the way she treated your brother—he said that when you came back from St. Bernard you boasted to him of the easy conquest you had made—"

He never finished his sentence—for Chitttenham's hands were at his throat, shaking him like a rat almost choking him—

"By God—you dare say that to me—you talk of Lombard! how much better are you? Believing the first foul lies that come to you about a woman you're supposed to care for! You're not worth thrashing—get out, that's all I've got to say to you—"

Still keeping one hand on Schofield, Chitttenham dragged him to the door and flung it open—shouting to one of the servants: "James, show this gentleman out, and if he refuses to go send for the police."

He released Schofield so violently that he almost fell. He waited a moment—then went back into the library, shutting the door behind him.

He was shaking from head to foot with uncontrollable passion, and his face and head were burning.

That any man should dare to accuse him of such a thing—and to Julie of all people—the woman he adored! . . . And again Chitttenham lost himself in the thought of that night on St. Bernard—when they had been shut in on all sides by storm and snow and tempest and he had held Julie in his arms.

In a revulsion of feeling he wished passionately that he had made true the almost unspoken accusation which Schofield had brought against him.

Julie would have been his then for ever—body and soul and nothing could ever have altered it.
