

STATE COLLEGE PLANS FOUR-H CLUB SCHOOL

Largest Attendance on Record is Promised for Session to Start on June 8

Between 700 and 800 4-H club boys and girls, ranging in age from 12 to 20 years, and representing more than 30 Oregon counties are expected to arrive on the Oregon State college campus June 8 for the Seventeenth Annual Club Summer session.

Despite the much-talked-of economic depression, both the total attendance and the number of boys and girls attending on scholarships awarded by the state fair and by various service clubs and other organizations of the state will be considerably larger than in any previous year, according to H. C. Seymour, state club leader.

Regular classes in agricultural and home economics subjects, games and all forms of supervised recreation, daily assemblies with prominent men of the state as speakers are provided for the boys and girls during their two-weeks' stay on the campus. Classes in forestry and training in fire prevention are among work offered for the boys for the first time this year. A number of additions have also been made in classes for girls.

The club members will live in the college dormitories again this year, will have the use of the regular college laboratories, and will be taught by members of the college faculty. In addition to the broadcasts put on by certain counties each evening over KOAC, the college radio station, one class will be broadcast each day, so that parents and others interested may hear the actual work the clubbers are getting.

C. A. Howard, state superintendent of public instruction; C. L. Starr, chairman of the board of higher education; and O. M. Plummer are among the prominent speakers who will address the club members during the session. An invitation has also been issued to Governor Julius L. Meier.

HAYING PRACTICES ARE STRESSED BY SPECIALIST

Quality Depends on Time, Manner of Cutting, Curing and Forage Crops

Quality in hay is largely dependent on its being cut at the proper stage, cured rapidly without bleaching or exposure to rain, and taken from the field as soon as it has cured sufficiently, according to D. D. Hill, associate agronomist at Oregon State college. Adequate equipment and labor to carry on each operation promptly are essential to production of good hay, he says.

Quality is determined largely by abundance of green color, and color is lost by poor cutting and curing methods, Hill points out. Hay cut too late, left too long in the swath, raked too soon, exposed to heavy dews or rains, heated in cocks or stacks, or otherwise poorly handled, loses color. Hay with poor color as a result of overripeness is woody and lacking in leaves.

Leafiness is important with clover and alfalfa, says Hill, as most of the protein is lost when the leaves shatter. Loss of leaves may be prevented by cutting early and avoiding excessive drying. Curing in the swath and windrow is likely to result in loss of leaves if the curing process is extended beyond two or three days.

Cutting alfalfa from the one-tenth to one-fourth bloom stage is advised by Hill for a normal method. Clover is best cut in full bloom before many heads turn brown. Grass makes the best hay if cut in the milk stage or just after blooming, and grain in the late milk or soft dough stage. Oats and vetch hay is not relished by livestock if cut too late, as mature vetch seed is bitter. When the lower pods on the vetch begin to fill is the best time to cut.

VALUE OF FERTILIZER IS DEMONSTRATED

A six-acre hillside field owned by E. L. Wilson of the Beaver Creek community in Lincoln county, which has formerly produced very little, was treated with nine tons of lime and seeded with a mixture of woolly-podded vetch and Austrian winter field peas. Last summer it yielded 17 large loads of hay. It was then seeded to common vetch and now has an almost perfect stand, according to M. J. Conklin, county agent. As very little vetch has been grown in that community, the field is attracting considerable attention.

POWER COMPANY TO DO FREE RANGE WIRING

An announcement of great interest to the people of Springfield has just been made public by W. K. Barnell, local manager of the Mountain States Power company. This unusual offer includes all wiring in connection with the installation of an electric range and water heater and means a substantial saving of $35.00 or more to purchasers of this modern labor-saving equipment for the home.

Much interest is being taken in this special concession on the part of the power company and it is expected that many local citizens will avail themselves of this unusual opportunity to install an electric range and water heater without installation costs. FARMS TO HAVE MORE HORSES IS PREDICTION

There is a pronounced shift back to horses this year. The horse population of the country shows an average of fourteen years while it should be but seven years, according to the federal census bureau.

Apparently horses will replace some of the sheep and cattle on many of the pastures of the middle west because cheap farm products will not support tractor farming. This will mean, too, that the consumption of feeds raised on the farm will be increased by the larger use of horses in motor power and less cash sent out of the country for gasoline and tractor accessories. Better prices for meat should prevail because the horse that will replace the sheep and cattle on the farms will not be used for meat food.

FORMULA FOR EARWIG POISON BAIT GIVEN

State College at Corvallis Prepares Booklet on Destruction of the Peats

Helpful information to be used in checking the spread of earwigs which have made their appearance in unusually large numbers this spring has been given by O. S. Fletcher county agent.

He recommends the following formula for a spray to be used on the bugs: Sodium fluoride, one pound; molasses, two quarts; water, two gallons; coarse wheat bran, 16 pounds. Dissolve the sodium fluoride and then the molasses in the water; stir well and add the solution to the desired amount of bran to be used and mix thoroughly.

The bran should be wet enough to spread and not ball up in lumps. The mixture should be spread around the foot of shrubs infested or wherever the earwigs gather. It should be spread just before dark as they come out to eat after dark. A special bulletin, "Destroy the Earwig" has been prepared by the Oregon State college and is ready for distribution.

Morris says that the dog was with a family that camped in the vicinity of the bridge last year and then moved to Idaho. The dog recently appeared in that neighborhood again and it is believed that he came back unassisted from Idaho as his feet were bloody and worn as though he had traveled a long distance on foot, the officer says.
