

WINTER GRAIN HAVE LIGHT YIELD

Barley Harvesting Near End; Dry Weather Blamed for Low Production

BINDERS USED ON WHEAT

Farm Officials Inspect Potato, Wheat, and Red Clover Fields for Certification

Belief that early crop yields in Lane county would be considerably less than in former years was expressed this week by O. H. Fletcher, Lane county agricultural agent as harvesting of winter barley and some fall wheat was being completed.

The average yield which should be obtained on a field of winter barley is 40 bushels per acre whereas this year a yield of 25 bushels seems to be a good crop. A combine being operated east of Springfield by J. A. Neher has harvested several fields of barley during the past 10 days and most of them averaged below 25.

Practically all winter barley, and some of the winter wheat which is to be cut and shocked has been harvested. Most of the barley has been combined.

The exceptionally long dry period early this spring is blamed for the light crop of winter grains. The late rains came too late to aid these crops, but it is believed that they have aided spring grains, and that better yields of this will be obtained.

Light Clover Crop
A shrinkage in the prospective yield of clover seed was predicted by the county agent after an inspection trip Tuesday with E. R. Jackman, extension agronomist at the State college.

The two made on inspection trip to certify fields of potatoes, clover and wheat for seed purposes. They visited six fields of hardy Ohio red clover and found that the seed crop was lighter than usual. Those farmers who cut their first crop for hay, not expecting any seed, now find that they will have a moderately fair crop. This clover is a new strain which Mr. Fletcher is endeavoring to get started in Lane county. It is an unusually virile seed and one which can successfully be shipped to the middle-west states and grown there without trouble with frost or excessive heat. He thinks the raising of this for seed offers an opportunity to farmers in the Willamette valley.

Testing New Wheat
He is also trying to create greater acreage of a new hardy wheat known as Hood wheat. Two farmers in the Irving district have 5 acre test tracts of this wheat and they are being carefully watched for production results.

Both the clover and the wheat seed which has been developed by the experiment station at Corvallis will be available in commercial quantities this fall and can be secured through the office of the county agent.

Home Destroyed By Sunday Fire

West Springfield Property Swept By Flames In Afternoon; Insurance Carried

Flames consumed the Sam Bettis residence located in West Springfield just south of the Old Mill dance hall Sunday afternoon about 2:30. The fire apparently started in the rear of the house from defective wiring. A considerable amount of the furniture and household effects were carried out by onlookers. Some insurance was carried on the house.

The fire had made such headway before the fire departments from Eugene and Springfield could reach the scene of the fire that all they could do was to use chemicals to prevent the flames from spreading to other buildings nearby. There was no water supply available for use by the fire trucks.

Several fruit trees were badly damaged by the flames and one caught fire and was nearly burned in two. Grass wilted and turned brown for many feet in all directions as the already warm air was further heated by the flames.

M'KENZIE HIGHWAY OILING UNDER WAY

Crew of Men at Work on Surfacing Projects Between Springfield and Doyle Hill

WORK REQUIRES MONTH

Total of 29.62 Miles to Be Completed; Highway to Be Ready in Summer 1932

Oiling of all completed portions of the McKenzie highway is being pushed in earnest this week with a crew of 58 men under the direction of William Hagerman. The work started the latter part of the week and a stretch of about five miles was completed and traffic allowed on it during the week-end.

Officials at the state highway office in Eugene estimate that it will take the oiling crews 27 days to complete their work which will include the oiling of 29.62 miles of highway.

The oiling work was started on the stretch between the Eugene power plant and Leaburg and is being brought down the valley towards Springfield where it will meet the section of highway that was oiled last year.

Sections of the highway to be oiled this summer include everything from east of Springfield to Doyle Hill, from Nimrod to Blue River, and from Blue River to Belknap. The Blue River-Belknap Springs section is about 16 miles long; the Nimrod-Blue River section is about six miles. Only a small part of this will have to be given a base coat of oil. Most of it is now oiled and will be given a coating of non-skid surfacing.

When the present oiling program is finished the major work on the McKenzie highway will have been completed. There will remain the section from Doyle Hill to Nimrod which is now under construction. There is a great deal of heavy work to be done there including the widening of highway, which can only be done by moving mountains of dirt and rock. This section will not be completed this year, but will most likely be oiled next summer if the necessary funds are settled sufficiently.

Oil for the highway work is being heated and unloaded from the Southern Pacific tracks near the depot in Springfield. Large trailer tanks are being used to transport the hot oil to the scene of operations. Crushed rock for the work has been placed at convenient places along the route of construction. The crusher at Camp Creek is still taking out rock for the highway between Wallowville and Hendricks bridge.
