Advice on Meats Told Housewives

Facts Regarding the Making of Hamburger, a Staple Meat, Are Given

A fact generally overlooked by the public is that, the making of hamburger and sausages is just as scientific as the making of bread. Hamburger, by the better meat markets, is made fresh every day. The best hamburger requires the using of first class beef, mixed with just the proper amount of fat to make it fry without crumbling.

In regards to use of any chemicals in hamburger, the law is very strict. Chemicals to color up the meat and make it red is forbidden and rightly so. But in regards to practices used by the more unscrupulous markets, of adding water and cereal to the meat to increase its weight, i. e., bringing twenty-five pounds of meat up to thirty-five pounds in order to sell it more cheaply, the law has a harder problem to detect. The public after a time in using this type of hamburger, soon learns of itself that it has been fooled by bargain prices.

In the first class grade of pork sausage, pure pork is mixed with a small amount of veal to avoid the grossness of too much pork. Seasoning is done by a definite formula of weight.

Cheap pork sausage is a heavy amount of veal and inferior meat mixed with pork fat, with a large amount of seasoning to hide poor quality of the meat.

ONE THING ABOUT THIS FLAMING YOUTH YOU HEAR SO MUCH ABOUT, IT'S SOMETHING TIME IS SURE TO CURE!

VERY LATEST by Mary Marshall

Probably because our clothes are longer, and more ample generally, all sorts of open work arrangements have been revived to give them the needed lightness and airiness. Hence we see eyelets, lace insertions, slashes, slits and fagoting which suggest the "peekaboo" insertions, slashes, slits and fagoting.

either side. Fold over to make a double strip, baste at the top, blind-stitch together firmly and press. Cut a paper pattern of the shape needed for the cuff several inches longer at the top than needed. Mark lines on this paper where the strips of material should come and make a curved design at the top of the cuff as shown in the sketch. Baste the strips on the paper, turning the top row in the center to form the circular extension. Use fine buttonhole twist to match the material and work in simple fagoting stitch. This is done by crossing and recrossing the thread between the strips to form a zig-zag line. A small stitch is taken in the band each time and the needle is then passed under the thread of the stitch that has just been taken, thus giving the twisted appearance at the edges.
