Any Fundamental Improvement in Agriculture Here Based on Irrigation

PLANTS ARE VISITED

Farmers, Business Men and State Development Leaders on Trip to Lane County

Any fundamental improvement in western Oregon agriculture in future must take into consideration utilization of available water supplies for supplemental irrigation, it was agreed by farmers, business men and state development leaders who joined in the second annual western Oregon irrigation tour sponsored by the Oregon State college extension service.

At farm after farm, starting from the A. J. Evers place in Washington county, on south to Eugene and back to the Sam Brown farm at Gervais, members of the party heard similar stories from owners who told how irrigation is making the difference between profit and loss on many of their farm operations.

Confirming these reports, the visitors themselves inspected dairy pastures from newly started strands, to old fields of irrigated landino clover. They examined all types of water supply systems from private gravity ditches to simple pumping plants, deep wells and community distribution systems such as now used at West Stayton.

Costs were found to vary from those on a farm in Washington county where a cash outlay of but $30 plus the farmer's work brought water enough for 12 acres right to his field, to elaborate overhead sprinkler systems in Eugene district where permanent installations costing around $100 per acre are giving excellent returns through production of intensive truck crops.

The extent to which irrigation is already established as a necessary practice was brought out at Eugene where J. O. Holt, manager of the Eugene Fruit Growers cooperative cannery, told how that cannery now will not accept any un-irrigated beans for canning, as the quality of the watered beans is so superior. By using irrigation the growers there are producing from seven to nine tons of high quality beans per acre which return the members around $100,000 per year.

County agents and extension specialists throughout the valley report increased interest in establishing irrigation systems.

ROWENA RIDES THE RUMBLE OF THE HUEYTON

THIRD INSTALMENT

Rackruff Motors hire Rowena to accompany Peter on a nationwide tour in their roadster as an advertising stunt. At the last minute Little Bobby is engaged to act as chauffeur.

A few miles out Bobby became tearful at being parted from her sweetheart and Rowena insisted on taking her place in the rumble so that she can ride with Peter and have him to talk to about Carter. Rowena got Peter to consent to an expensive money each week as soon as it arrives, and announces Peter by eating too economically.

To his intense amazement Rowena flushed hotly and bit her lip in some confusion, and most surprising of all, said nothing. Albeit Peter found it amazing when Rowena had nothing to say.

Certainly she had plenty to say at Niagara Falls when Peter prepared to do his picture of the Rackruff roadster, with her at the wheel, both showing faintly under a fine mist of falling water. When it came to doing pictures, Peter was unbearable. Carter himself could not have been more hatefully dictatorial. He told her what to wear, how to hold the wheel, how to hold the wheel, which way to turn her head, just where to fluff her hair and where to draw it back.

"Oh, Peter," protested Rowena faintly. "Please don't do my profile. I'm terrible that way. My face is too thin for a side view."

"Oh, I'll fill it in for you," said Peter cheerfully. "It shows up better in the car."

"Oh, the car," muttered Rowena crossly. "It's all you think of."

"It's all I'm paid to advertise," said Peter cheerfully. When he had finished the picture Rowena wrote a brief adjective story to go with it, and both were dispatched to Rackruff headquarters for immediate release. In addition to the motor story she wrote a short skit every day for use in the newspapers of different cities as they passed through.

At Rackruff headquarters in Chicago they received their first mail from home. There was one fat letter for Rowena, addressed in a big boyish scrawling hand. And there was one for Peter from the company with instructions for the tour and a check for the following week's expenses.

Bobby was thrilled with a huge package of telegrams, twenty in all, and every one from Carter. Peter's finer feelings were highly outraged, for each of the twenty telegrams ended with a stern command for her to come home at once.

Even in his wildest nightmares, he said in the telegrams, had never conceived of a horror equal to that of seeing her much-loved features on public posters and monstrous billboards on every conspicuous corner in town, advertising a cheap new roadster.

Bobby's first intention was to ignore each and every one of these telegraphic outbursts, but by mid-afternoon she had relented so far as to send him a five-cent post-card picture of Lake Michigan. At supper time she sent a telegram saying they had arrived safely and were leaving early the next morning; and then kept Rowena awake until three o'clock in the morning with the scratch of her pen as she wrote him an account of everything that had happened so far.

FEWER BOYS NOW AT STATE SCHOOL

Parole Officer Says System is Working Out Well; Number of Inmates Reduced

Through operation of the parole system, the Oregon State training school at Woodburn has reduced the number of boys to 85 now, says C. A. Lewis, parole officer.

The institution at one time had 120 boys enrolled. The parole system is working well now and this is a big saving to taxpayers as it is estimated to cost $35 a month for the care of each boy at the school.

Approximately 75 per cent of the boys sent to the school are from "broken homes," where one or both of the parents are dead or parents divorced.

Under the parole system, Mr. Lewis, says that about 70 per cent of the boys are not again in trouble. The remainder are returned for a second time as parole violators. Of these about one-third are returned a third time and this largely determines that these boys are a problem.

Peter was unbearable when drawing pictures.

spot, Rowena had spent the morning in the rumble seat idling swift notes on mid-western motoring and was anxious to transcribe them to the typewriter before her memorandum froze on her. So she asked Peter, very politely, if he would please do the picture of the roadster and the wooded dell first, while she was putting her notes into permanent form, and then paint her in behind the wheel later on in the afternoon when the rest of the picture was done. Peter was perfectly willing, even eager, to lay over for an extra day, thus to allow time for her work as well as his, but he said a picture never turned out as well as a good argument—Rowena lost her temper, she usually lost her temper—and the delicious log cabin waffles and honey were ruined.

When, very sulky, but prepared to pose, she flopped down where Peter had parked the car behind a shadowy pool and was setting up his easel, he said he thought better of it and would not use her in that picture—said Bobby was willing to substitute and the change would be a good thing all round. Peter was quite pleasant about it, really thought he was doing her a favor, but Rowena, from being merely sulky, was suddenly furious. She said she had been hired for no other purpose than to serve as a dumb model for his art and that she would jeopardize her contract by accepting this substitute. But Peter insisted that Messrs. Rack and Ruff had left everything about the pictures to his own exclusive judgment, and this was his judgment.

"Bobby is putting on his little red sports suit," he said, "and the costume will show up nicely in this green dell."

"I know Bobby's clothes are much better than mine," said Rowena stiffly. "I know my things are very shabby and threadbare, but it seems scarcely necessary to throw it up to me."

"That is very unfair of you, Rowena," said Peter gravely. "You are very beautiful in everything you put on, and you know it. I couldn't speak unfavorably of your appearance if I wanted to."

Rowena, without another word, plumped herself down behind the wheel with set chin, a stern glint in green eyes, and a death grip on her slim hands on the wheel. Peter walked slowly up to her and looked her steadily in the face.

"When if you will have the truth, Rowena," he said gently, "I would see you hanged before I would try to paint you in this lovely spot. I am so disgusted with the way you act sometimes that I would probably paint you with horns and a tail—sitting in the mud, and I often suspect you have concealed about you. If I painted you the way you look to me right now they'd never sell another Rackruff short of Gehenna."

Rowena's lovely red lips parted, then closed with a sudden click. Her eyes grew so wide, and turned so deep a hazel that Peter marvelled he had ever thought them green.

She got out of the car and went up to the log cabin where she met Bobby coming out of the ladies' dressing-room, all dimpling smiles in the pleasant prospect of posing.

"Peter is terribly tired and cross to-day, poor dear," said Rowena smoothly. "Try to cheer him up, won't you, darling? He's very blue. Tell him about Carter."

Under the parole system, Mr. Lewis, says that about 70 per cent of the boys are not again in trouble. The remainder are returned for a second time as parole violators. Of these about one-third are returned a third time and this largely determines that these boys are a problem.
