Cut in Rates of Dog Tags Pends

Board to Consider Asking Court to Lower Price for 1932; Meeting Nov. 2

Some action on the cost of county dog licenses for 1932 will probably be recommended at a meeting of the county dog control board November 2.

The present rate is $2 for a male dog and $3 for a female dog. A proposal is to be considered to ask the county court to make the rate $1 and $2. A penalty of $2 is charged for all dog owners who do not obtain licenses before March 1 each year.

There is no longer a city dog license as this was abolished by state law taking effect last June.

Irrigation Increases In State According to Census Report

According to a bulletin, recently issued by the Bureau of Census, showing state and county statistics on irrigation in the state of Oregon, the number of farms on which irrigation is practiced increased from 9,154 in 1920 to 11,387 in 1930. The value of the irrigated farms, including land, buildings, and improvements and machinery was $171,919,001.

The area irrigated in 1929 was 588,713 acres, a decrease of 8.9 per cent from 642,162 acres irrigated in 1919, and was 5.4 per cent of the total area of all farms in 1930. The 4,066 operating enterprises were capable of supplying water to 1,158,210 acres. Nearly one-third of the area was irrigated by enterprises begun in the decade 1900-1909.

Individual and partnership systems accounted for more than half of the irrigated area. The report also shows the acreage irrigated by cooperatives, commercial companies, irrigation districts, and government projects. More than two-fifths of it was irrigated under adjudicated water rights, while an additional one-fourth held permits or certificates from the state.

Snake River and its tributaries furnished water for nearly one-third of the area irrigated in 1929, and Klamath River and tributaries accounted for one-seventh more. The number of irrigation pumping plants almost doubled, totalling 1091 in 1930, and only 573 in 1920. However, nearly three-fourths of the irrigated area was served by gravity diversions from streams.

A total investment of $38,754,548 by irrigation enterprises was an increase of $9,825,397 over the total in 1920. The irrigation investments and the irrigation works are classified by age, by character of enterprise, and by drainage basin.

The report shows that it has cost on the average, $27.29 an acre to prepare land for irrigation in Oregon, in addition to the cost of the irrigation systems. Projects distributing water delivered 3.1 acre-feet per acre to irrigators in 1929, but diverted at their headworks 4.8 acre-feet.

Irrigation enterprises reporting drainage represented 436,425 irrigable acres. Of this area, 230,413 acres were served by installed drains, and 94,866 additional acres were in need of drainage. In 1929 only 93,799 acres in irrigation enterprises were drained, while 46,115 additional acres needed drainage.

A copy of his bulletin for Oregon may be obtained by writing to the Director of the Bureau of Census, Washington, D. C.
