MEDICAGO SATIVA IS GREAT FARM CROP

Forage Plant Given High Praise by O. S. C. Specialist; is Good for Large Area

Oregon has had its share of "wonder plants," seeds of which came from an Egyptian tomb or perhaps the crew of a wild goose, says E. R. Jackman, extension farm crops specialist at Oregon State college, and many in this state have got excited over magazine stories of world beating crops that later proved failures here.

Occasionally, however, a wonderful crop does show up, such as Federation wheat in eastern Oregon, sweet clover in the middle west and lespediza in the south. And right now there is a crop in western Oregon of truly marvelous properties, says Jackman. It is Medicago sativa.

"It is the best hay crop in existence," Jackman says positively. "It stays green and succulent throughout the driest summer, is economical to grow and is high in both protein and minerals, so that animals fed on it stay in good condition. This forage plant can be pastured, fed green or used for hay, producing the latter at the rate of three to five tons per acre year after year without reseeded. The hay is suitable for cows, horses or sheep and even hogs clean it up to the last straw.

Enriches Soil
"When fields that have grown Medicago sativa are finally plowed up it is found that the crop has enriched the soil beyond belief," Jackman continues. "Fields which formerly produced 20-bushel grain yields jump to 40 bushels, and the beneficial effects last many years.

"One would think that seed of such a plant would be extremely high in price, as a salesman might easily convince one that it would be worth $50 a pound, but fortunately the seed is plentiful and a field may be planted for only $2.50 an acre—not much more than for a grain crop."

Mr. Jackman estimates that at least 500,000 acres in western Oregon are adapted to this crop. County agents in every Willamette valley county have seen it tried and are enthusiastic over its possibilities, some saying it will do more to pull dairymen through the depression than congress can or will do.

"Those interested in trying Medicago sativa can get seed from any dealer by asking for it by its common name, ALFALFA," Jackman concludes. "It is well to ask for certified seed of the Grimm variety."

Drives to Portland—John Anderson, local Ford dealer spent Tuesday in Portland transacting business.

VERY LATEST

Shoulder cape collars are the latest arrivals in the realm of evening dress. You can attach one on an old evening dress to cover the shoulders and upper arms, or you can leave it unattached so that your dress may be worn with it or without. A black satin or chiffon evening dress may be supplemented with a little chiffon velvet collar of this sort—to be worn at the theater or for restaurant dining, or left off for dancing.

Some of the very new dresses are sold with detachable cape collar.

lars weighted at the edge with an inch wide band of beads. The beads give the touch of glitter that is becoming increasingly important this season and also serve to weigh down the cape in a flattering manner.

Whether you are slender or the reverse you will find a cape collar of this sort decidedly becoming and desirable because it gives the effect of added width through the shoulders that accents slenderness of waist and hips.

Lincoln School Notes
Current events classes at the Lincoln school elected new officers on Friday. Officers of the Eighth A1 class elected the following: Florence May, president; Caroline Hicks, vice-president; Woodrow Bates, secretary; Barbara Barnell, paper tender.

Officers of the Eighth A2 grade elected were as follows: Lillian Gregory, president; Lillian Trinka, vice-president; Dolores Casteel, secretary; Colene Cornell, paper tender.

Miss Ball, student instructor from the physical education department of the University of Oregon, has taken over the baseball coaching work at the Lincoln school.

The first, second, and third grades held a party for their parents Friday. Contests were played and prizes were given the winners. Refreshments were also served.

Survey Reveals Growers' Plans

Increased Production of Corn and Turkeys Indicated; Potato Acreage Same

Oregon State College, Corvallis, Mar. 31—Another moderate increase in the Oregon corn acreage, more turkeys, but no increase in acreage of late potatoes or number of pullets to be raised, are in prospect this year, according to a report just released by the college extension service. These trends were indicated by intentions-to-produce surveys made by the U. S. department of agriculture, with supplemental information gathered by the extension service.

The corn outlook is relatively favorable, according to the report which says "the demand for corn in Oregon during the 1932-33 marketing season, as usual, may be expected to exceed the supply of home-grown corn." The surveys indicated that growers intend to increase the acreage about 15 per cent, with somewhat greater increase indicated in the central Willamette valley and in Malheur county. Prices for corn in Oregon are adjusted largely by the cost of shipping corn in from other states, thus the farm price ranges well above the average of the whole country.

With respect to the late potato outlook the report points out that there may be no increase in the
