VALUE OF FRUIT, NUT CROP TOLD

Four Percent of Crop Land Used for Fruits and Nuts; Value is 15% of Total

The great economic importance of fruit and nut production in the State's agricultural industry is shown by data contained in an analysis of the trend of tree fruits, nut and berry acreage in Oregon just published by the O. S. C. extension service.

Although only approximately 4 per cent of all land used for crop production is in tree fruits, nuts and berries, the average cash farm income from 1926 to 1930 was approximately $18,360,000 a year, or 15 per cent of the total cash income from all crops and livestock, according to the circular.

The average cash farm income from 1926 to 1930 in Oregon for apples was $5,006,000, prunes $3,159,000, dried $2,669,000 and fresh $490,000, peaches $2,484,000, cherries $1,556,000, peaches $205,000 and apricots and plums $20,000, according to estimates by the United States department of agriculture.

The income from walnuts averaged $356,000. Strawberries brought an average of $1,793,000, cranberries $62,000, other berries $3,591,000 and grapes $29,000.

Total Apple Trees Reduced
By means of conversion factors the author of the report, L. R. Brethaupt, college extension economist, calculated the acreage of each kind of fruit and nuts from census data showing the number of trees in 1909, 1919, 1924 and 1929.

The resulting data indicate an upward trend in total acreage during the past twenty years largely accounted for by increases in cherries, pears, prunes, strawberries, raspberries, walnuts and filberts. The total apple acreage has declined to less than one-half of what it was in 1909, but is still second to prunes with pears and walnuts both about to exceed apples in acreage.

More recent data on crop acreage are contained in the annual sample census prepared by the college extension service.

CAREFUL EGG HANDLING PAYS 20 PERCENT BONUS

Visitors at the state fair poultry booth prepared by the poultry department of Oregon State college had presented a graphic example of the money value in caring for eggs once they are produced.

Two cases of eggs were taken from actual receipts at a large egg receiving station and without any juggling were graded out as they must be to be marketed. These two 30-dozen cases were found to vary so much in quality that on a basis of 20c per dozen for extras, the crate shipped by the one man was worth only $4.57 while the other was worth $5.58, or a premium amounting to more than 20 percent.

The first crate was found to contain 19 dozen extras at 20c, 7 dozen standards at 18c, and 4 dozen mediums at 13c. The second crate, which doubtless cost just as much to produce and certainly represented just as much feed cost, only had 2 dozen extras, 8 dozen standards, 11 dozen firsts at 15c, 6 dozen mediums and 3 dozen undergrades worth only 10c per dozen.

The one factor of storing in a cool place before shipment has been found to account for much of this gain in quality, while other ordinary management details were responsible for the rest in this and other instances.
