What Going Off Gold Standard Means to the Nation's Farmers

By FRANK PARKER STOCKBRIDGE

The United States of America has "gone off the gold standard." That sounds shocking to people who fear all change, and it takes some mental adjusting on the part of the rest of us who have not yet become accustomed to the rapidity with which everything is changing today.

What does it mean, this going off gold? What is the purpose? What will the effect be? What has it to do with this talk about inflation? What is inflation, anyway? Who will it benefit and who will it hurt? Those are the questions on the tip of everybody's tongue.

In Sequence

The United States went off the gold standard March 4, when President Roosevelt declared an embargo on shipments of gold abroad and called all hoarded gold back into the Federal Reserve banks. Since then we have shipped no gold abroad except on contracts already entered into. Since then nobody holding a gold certificate or other paper money calling for payment in gold has been able to get gold for it. We still have the gold, nearly half of all the gold there is in the world, more than four thousand million dollars of it in our Treasury and banks, but we have stopped using it.

The purpose of our action is, as President Roosevelt stated, to bring about higher prices. The first place it has affected prices is in our foreign trade, for the principal use of gold as money is in settling trade balances between nations. It is the one commodity which every nation in the world accepts as money.

Immediately we went off gold, commodity prices in international trade began to rise in terms of dollars. For as soon as any nation's paper money ceases to be redeemable in gold, people who have that money begin to look for something else—wheat, tobacco, cotton, lard, steel or other non-perishable forms of wealth—in which to redeem it. They begin to buy those things, and their paper money buys less of them than it did before. In other words, they bid prices up.

In Farm Products

It may seem to some that we in America are not concerned with what happens in foreign trade. But it is from our sales overseas that a very large part of the money comes, which pays for our farm products. More than half of all cotton grown in America must be sold abroad if the growers of the South are not to suffer. In Texas alone, it has been figured out, the loss to the entire state from the low price of cotton in the export trade, has been over $400 for every family in the state!

Almost half of the money which tobacco growers get for their crop comes from foreign sales. We normally sell abroad from a quarter to a third of all the lard we produce, about one-sixth of our wheat and about the same share of our apple crop, more than half of our turpentine, gasoline and benzol, over a quarter to one-half of our factory products in many important lines.

It seems highly important, then, to get the highest possible prices for these goods in the world market. But when foreign nations have let their money depreciate they cannot buy as much or pay as good a price, so long as we maintain our dollar on the gold basis. On the other hand, with their cheap money, they can produce at less cost than we can and sell their goods to us for our gold dollars cheaper than we can produce them when all our costs are measured in gold.

How Producer is Helped

So in going off gold we have cheapened our dollar to meet the other cheap moneys of the world, and already commodity prices have begun to rise. In other words, we have started on a program of inflation of the currency, which is merely another way of saying increasing prices.

The gold embargo is a very mild form of inflation. It is certain to be followed by other forms, directly applicable to our internal affairs. It makes no difference, really, what the value of the dollar is in foreign money except when we deal in foreign trade, because a dollar at a low value will pay a debt incurred in dollars when they were at high value. So the farmer or producer who gets more dollars for his commodity can pay his dollar debts with them, even though they are cheaper dollars.

Inflation will help the debtor class because it will take less wheat, cotton, shoes or what have you to get the necessary number of dollars with which to pay. It will hurt the large creditor class because, although they will get their interest and principal repayments in dollars, as before, those dollars will not buy as much, will not represent as much real wealth.

We have as beneficiaries of inflation the farmer who will get more dollars for their crops, the wage-earners, who will benefit by increased employment, (although wages do not tend to rise as fast as the cost of living) business men whose goods on hand become worth more dollars, and whose sales in dollars increase faster than costs.

Time for Change

We have been going through an increasing process of deflation for more than two years. It had reached the point where debtors as a whole found themselves totally unable to pay. To have pressed de-
