WASHINGTON BY RADFORD MURPHY

Washington, D. C. June 15—The real test of the Roosevelt policies will come after congress has adjourned and gone home and the president, with unexampled power of experiment and unlimited freedom of action, gets under way with the "New Deal."

So far about all that has been done is to set up the new machinery. Little of it has as yet started to work. The definite improvement in business and industry all over the country is still largely due to an improvement in the morale of the public.

The one positive action of the administration which has brought results thus far is the suspension of gold payments, which has had a marked effect upon prices, first in foreign trade and now gradually being reflected in domestic commerce.

The tendency here is to suggest that if one single positive act coupled with the mere promise of others can lift prices, what may not happen when the whole Roosevelt program gets into full action?

Aiming at Higher Prices The definite aim of the administration is to raise commodity prices.

Just which of the many powers granted to the president will be the ones which will do the most good, nobody tries to guess. It seems certain that there will be some sort of so-called "inflation" of the dollar, having for its purpose the raising of prices, but which method of inflation will be adopted the president himself does not know yet.

Much will depend upon the outcome of the World Economic Conference which met in London on June 12th. There is a possibility of such a far-reaching international agreement on money and prices that it will not be necessary for any nation, at least not for the United States, to do anything else to bring about the restoration of the price level to where it was in, say, 1926. But the whole conference with Europe's internal disagreements on the question of disarmament, and with the growing insistence of our European debtors that we forgive them their debts before they will play with us, that Washington is not really expecting much out of the conference.

Equipped Either Way Many of the monetary powers which the president asked of congress and received, had the double purposes of being good weapons to use in the economic battle in London and, if we fall to win there, very useful tools for a nation which decides to do it alone, regardless of what the rest of the world does.

And that is the real expectation among those on the inside; that the United States will work out its own program of rehabilitation, by controlling production both in agriculture and industry so that we shall not be dependent upon foreign countries to buy our surplus, since there won't be any surplus to export.

The first actual step toward inflation of the currency was taken a couple of weeks ago when the Federal Reserve banks began to buy government bonds with the new currency. The Federal Reserve is authorized to buy up to three thousand million dollars of outstanding bonds and to pay for them in new money which is not based on gold but on the government's unsupported promise to pay. As this is written, about 25,000,000 of the new currency has been issued. Taking these bonds out of frozen asset, and giving the banks instead of them bright, new notes which can be used for money, is one way of liquidating the banking situation.

Gold Dollar Value There has been a great deal of talk about the possible devaluation of the gold dollar. The president is authorized to reduce the amount of gold in the dollar by as much as one-half. That is not saying that he intends to do that. Power and intent are two different things. But some of those on the inside believe that there will be no use of this power until and unless the price level reaches a point at which it seems desirable to stabilize it, and that then may be done by a declaration by the president devaluing the dollar permanently.

There are two ways of looking at higher prices. Mr. Roosevelt's friends point out. One is to call it higher commodity prices, the other is to talk of cheaper dollars. Just now the dollar is dearer than it has been for more than twenty years. That is just another way of saying that prices are so low that nobody can make a reasonable profit in producing and selling goods. Admitting that a cheap dollar raises the cost of living, its advocates point out that the dear dollar closes factories and leaves farmers with no surplus to spend, and they think it is preferable to have men employed and purchasing power of producers restored than to have millions out of work with no dollars wherewith to take advantage of the low prices.

Money in Commodities Now

Reports from all the financial centers and the banks are that, in anticipation of the dollar going cheaper, men and institutions with money in hand in considerable amounts are trying to protect themselves by putting their money into commodities or securities which will tend to increase in dollar value, instead of keeping their funds in dollars. If a dollar is going to buy only half as much six months from now, the man who has a dollar today and hangs on to it is going to be worth only half as much. But if cotton or copper or silver or shares in companies producing commodities are likely to go up, then the dollar invested now may be worth two of the future cheap dollars, and the investor will come out even in the long run.

There is great assurance that the process of inflation will not be a runaway, in the appointment of Pro-
