HALF OF STATE PUBLICLY OWNED

State, County City Ownership Accounts For 1 1/2 Million Acres; Much Federal

A program of land planning such as is now being started nationally and in the various states, does not imply "regimentation" in the sense that individuals will be told how to use their own land, it was brought out at the regional planning conference at Seattle this month. An effective planning program would mean that land will not be used in such a way as to be against the public interest. Oregon's land planning problems are mostly tied up with management of public lands within the state. A. S. Burrier, state consultant from Oregon, told the conference. Burrier, who has been "borrowed" temporarily from the farm management department at Oregon State college, pointed out that 32 million acres, or almost exactly half of Oregon's area, are under public ownership.

Federal Government Owner About a million acres are under state ownership, and about three-quarters of a million acres are under county or municipal ownership, so that about 95 per cent of the land under public ownership is

U.O. HEAD URGES ADULT STUDIES

Parents Should Study With Children To Avoid Tragedy In Later Part Of Life University of Oregon, Eugene, Dec. 27.—(Special)—The next goal of adult education in the United States should be a two-fold program of training of parents in relation to their own children, it was declared here by Dr. C. V. Boyer, president of the University of Oregon, in an interview. Dr. Boyer, long a strong advocate of adult education, has closely studied this work not only in this country but abroad.

The program Dr. Boyer has in mind includes: First, classes for parents in elementary school subjects and those taught in high schools, so that parents denied educational opportunities in their youth can keep up with their children, and second, classes that will actually instruct the parent in taking care of the child and aiding him in development in learning, training and character.

Keep Up With Children "One of the tragedies of American life is that children go to grammar school, then high school and often on to college, and somewhere in the process far outstrip their parents in education," Dr. Boyer points out. "This often sets up a barrier between parent and child that leads to misunderstanding and actual grief. If parents would attempt to keep up with the children, a common bond would be established and a great deal of pleasure and mutual benefit derived from learning together."

Courses to aid parents in rearing their children properly would not need to have such high sounding names as "psychology of adolescence," or those similar, although courses in psychology should be included on the program, but could be simply "reading for the child," "choice is a profession," "home and school discipline," "problems of the home," and "child growth," Dr. Boyer stated. "The mere presentation to the parent of the material offered the child, together with the reasons therefor, would in itself be of immeasurable aid," Dr. Boyer points out.

Work Should Be Correlated Taking as a basis adult education work already available, and adding such courses as are needed, the program proposed by Dr. Boyer could be carried out under the direction of some central agency. The necessary objective is that of definite, correlated parent education, he states.

State and local planning agencies, parent-teacher organizations, institutions of higher education and other civic groups should make this definite program one of their aims, Dr. Boyer believes.
