INVITE FARMERS TO PCA MEETING

Production Credit Body Meets Financial Needs Of Farmers In Cooperative Way

All Lane county farmers are urged to attend the first annual meeting of the Willamette Production Credit association at Salem, January 14.

"The Willamette Production Credit Association is the farmer's own cooperative organization, making production loans to its stockholder-members on a business basis at actual cost," says J. M. Thorne, secretary. "It isn't a government agency and it doesn't loan government money. The federal government, through the farm credit administration, helped provide the machinery, but it is up to farmers themselves to operate this machinery successfully."

A. B. Robertson, assistant treasurer of the Production Credit corporation of Spokane, will be present to answer questions regarding production credit and other divisions of the farm credit administration system.

The Production Credit corporation supplied a major portion of the original capital required to set up the association, and exercises general supervision over the 30 PGAs now serving farmers in every county of the four northwest states.

Loans have been available this year at 5 per cent—a record low rate. Future loan costs will depend, of course, upon the trend of the money market and how the associations conduct their business—how well they develop a profitable volume of loans, reduce their overhead and avoid losses.

The associations discount the notes of their members through the Federal Intermediate Credit bank of Spokane, which uses them as backing for debentures offered to the investing public. As additional collateral, the associations pledge their capital stock (invested in government bonds) with the credit bank, but they draw interest on it to supplement their earnings.

The present standing of Intermediate Credit bank debentures is so high that investors have been eager to buy them at a yield of approximately 1 per cent. This standing, of course, must be upheld if cheap loan funds are to continue. The credit bank operates on a 1 per cent margin, giving the associations at present a discount rate of 2 per cent. The associations are permitted a 3 per cent margin for operating expenses, so farm borrowers pay 5 per cent at present, with provision for receiving dividends when profits materialize.

By using this cooperative system, farmers are now able to finance their crops and livestock as cheaply as "big business" finances itself. PCA borrowers also have opportunity to get on a "cash basis" in the purchase of their supplies. Out of their loan advances they can pay cash for such purchases, repaying the association from farm proceeds. In this manner they pay but 5 per cent interest, whereas the ordinary way of buying on "time" often requires paying as much as 10 per cent.

Instead of shelling peas, throw the pods and all—after culling the bad ones—into boiling water. When the peas are done the pods will rise to the surface of the water, leaving the peas at the bottom. The pods add to the flavor of the peas as well as making this a much simpler way to prepare them.
