

COAST BUSINESS OUTLOOK HAZY

Home Building Shows Gains; Industrial Output Slows Down During Month

Business was somewhat less active in May than in April in the Twelfth Federal Reserve district. Industrial output declined and measures of trade turned downward during the month. Residential building continued to rise, although permits awarded for other types of construction declined.

In the Pacific Northwest, industrial operations were sharply curtailed by the strike of lumber mill workers; and loggers in the Douglas fir area. In other sections of the district, after allowance for a more than seasonal decline in vegetable canning which followed unusual activity in April, no material change in output of other industries was indicated by available data. Operations at automobile assembly plants and tire factories were moderate. On the other hand, output of both crude oil and refined petroleum products was somewhat greater than in the preceding month. Activities at motion picture studios were expanded and mining and development work on non-ferrous metals properties were well maintained.

Reflecting in part a large decline in lumber shipments, industrial freight loadings decreased, whereas a moderate expansion is customary in May. Merchandise and miscellaneous loadings also declined. Recession in department store sales was larger than usual, particularly in the Pacific Northwest where a marked improvement was recorded in the preceding month. Sales of new automobiles declined substantially from the relatively high levels of April. An increase in intercoastal traffic during May approximately offset a sharp decline in April, associated with the recent strike of tanker seamen. Eastbound petroleum shipments were double those for April.

Loans and investments of district banks showed little change during the five week period, but a moderate decline in deposits occurred. This circumstance reflects, in part, a substantial net transfer of funds out of the district for the account of banks and their customers which was only partially offset by Treasury disbursements in excess of collections in the district. United States Treasury collections were unusually large because of a return by banks of additional postal savings funds and because of further deposits by national banks to retire liability for their circulating notes.

FRUIT JUICES MAY BE BOTTLED FOR FUTURE

Supplies of fruit juices may be stored away for use in jellies or as delicious drinks.

Various fruit juices, which may be used to replenish the jelly supply or to make refreshing and healthful drinks, are easily and quickly bottled during the berry season, says Miss Lucy A. Case, nutrition specialist at Oregon State college.

One of the most important points to be remembered in canning or bottling fruit juices is that at no time during the process should either the fruit or the juice be allowed to boil, says Miss Case, as this spoils the flavor of the juice. Detailed directions, prepared by the bureau of home economics of the U. S. department of agriculture, are as follows:

First wash the berries or other fruit. Then mash a small portion of the fruit in a kettle and stir while heating it quickly just to the boiling point, but not allowing it to boil. Remove at once and strain the heated juice through a heavy jelly bag. The juice that runs from the bag without pressure is generally clearer than that obtained by pressure, and may be bottled separately if desired.

Sugar Retains Color - Less juicy fruits may require a little longer cooking at the simmering point and a small amount of water, about one-fourth cup to a pound of fruit, is sometimes needed.

Sugar may be added to the strained juice if desired—about one cup to a gallon of juice. It helps to retain the color and improves the flavor of the juice, but is not necessary for preservation. If used, it should be dissolved by stirring just before the juice is reheated.

Never Allow To Boil - The strained juice is reheated to the simmering point—185 degrees F. or 85 degrees C.—and poured into hot, sterilized bottles, filling to within one inch of the top if crown caps are to be used, or two inches if corks are to be used. The bottles are sealed, either by capping or by corking tightly, before processing. Corks may be made safe by pushing in tightly and then placing a double square of cheese cloth over the cork and tying it down with a string around the neck of the bottle below the collar.

The sealed bottles are placed on a rack in a large container of warm water on the stove, and brought to the simmering point and kept there for 10 minutes, but not allowed to boil. The bottles are best laid on their sides, with the water at least two inches over the top layer. The bottles are then removed and allowed to cool. Where corks are used it is best to dip the cork and top of the bottle in semi-liquid paraffin or sealing wax. Label and store in cool, dark, dry place.

Calls Recklessness In Use Of Cars a Species of Crime

Marlen E. Pew of Editor and Publisher Regards Automobile Accident Problem as Part of This Ruthless Age—Condemns Coarse Individualism.

HOLY COMMAND IS CITED

"It is my view that the continuing slaughter and maiming of human beings on the streets and highways of this country is part and parcel of our bewildered, ruthless and unspiritual age," writes Marlen E. Pew, editor of Editor and Publisher and the Fourth Estate, in a booklet on the traffic situation published by the Travelers Insurance Company.

"As a people, we do not hold in high respect the holy command of all ages and of all religions: Thou Shalt Not Kill. We do not even honor, in practice, the common tenet of all civilized peoples that man's first duty is to protect his neighbor as himself.

"These strictures are not based upon a condition that is unavoidable, for it is well established by now that a high percentage of motor accidents might easily be prevented. We kill thousands and injure approximately a million men, women and children, every year, because at bottom the average driver and pedestrian figuring in such accidents is either himself reckless or is the victim of another reckless person.

Results Discouraging - "For years I have witnessed the more or less apathetic and staggering attempts of government, Federal and local, to cope with this horror and I have seen the efforts of many worthy organizations, social, political and economic, to stem the bloody tide. The results are bitterly discouraging. Nothing has been said, nothing done, which has any meaning to the brazen motorist who is more intent upon arriving at his destination through the exercise of coarse and inhuman individualism than he is to conserve decent safety for the lives of others, or indeed, his own precious hide. It is a kind of madness, which historians of the future will regard as a piece with the dare-devil spirit of the American people in this age.

"I believe in fighting this monster realistically, which calls for laws to make motor driving a serious responsibility, with reckless guilt made personal and highly expensive. I believe in preventive measures of the most rigid nature, demanding that no person shall take the wheel except as he has qualified as a driver; I believe in the policing of roads and streets and
