As all the Chinamen look alike, it is doubtful if he is caught unless the Chinese follow an identity him.

The outlook for the Scio creamery is brighter this fall than in many years past. The supply of milk is on the increase, and many are preparing to furnish milk early in the spring. The fiber company this week received another machine for the manufacture of fiber. The Lebanon Criterion stated last week that a merchant in that city had purchased in a single day twelve dozen chickens, and the fact was commented upon at length. Twelve dozen chickens would hardly be worth bothering with down this way. Ross E. Hibler's books will show a greater average than that the whole season through, and he oftentimes gets from twelve to fifteen dozens from one person, and on several occasions he has purchased as high as 200 turkeys in a single day. Aside from this is one fact recently he purchased over 700 dozen eggs. Scio is the produce center of the valley, and we do not think anything about shipping from fifteen to twenty coops of poultry per day. Not only our own people raise and market a good deal of poultry, but a large quantity of it comes from farms nearer other towns in the valley than Scio, and this fact is the best evidence of our progress. Building & Canal.

The Curtis Lumber company, at Detroit, is constructing a canal between their mill pond and the end of Corvallis & Eastern spur on the Breckenridge, for floating logs down to the cars for shipment to their mill at Mill City. The canal is 600 feet long, 18 feet deep by 12 feet wide, cut through solid cement gravel, at a cost of about $2,000, and will be boxed on the inside with lumber, with a floodgate at each end. The canal will also furnish water power for loading the logs, thereby saving the expense incurred by hauling them to the mill. The company also intends building a large dam for the purpose of storing logs to be held in reserve for the season so the mills will be able to run full time. The company is now using eight logging engines in the woods.
