The company affected a settlement with Mr. Craft and the work of extending the flume will be pushed to a completion at once. The mill is running most of the time, and getting out an excellant quality of lumber, which will find a ready sale as soon as placed on the market.

Scio has always bragged of her produce shipments, and we are not going to take a back seat for any town in the valley of our size, or a little bigger, if necessrry. This week R. E. Hibler shipped 1500 dozen eggs—and it wasn't very good weather for eggs, either. One thousand six hundred dozen or nineteen thousand two hundred eggs make quite a pile all to one week, but the country around Scio is the best produce country in the world.

Golden's New Ferry.

Dr. T. L. Golden now has in operation his new ferry across the North Santiam on the Salem and Scio road. It is the best boat ever put in at that place, and patrons will be well served hereafter. The doctor will be there all summer, and in the meantime a good man will be in charge.

New Fire Whistle.

The Salem fire department has received a three-chime whistle, that will be substituted for the old fire bell, which has seen many years of service. The whistle will be installed at some local manufacturing plant, and will prove a more satisfactory way of sounding the fire alarm, since the bell cannot be heard any great distance. In the absence of any regular fire alarm system, it is proposed, with the installation of the fire whistle, to divide the city into a dozen fire districts and adopt a code of signals as a means of definitely locating fires for the department and enabling the firemen to reach the scene promptly.

Married.

BENLINE—SCHEFER.—At the home of the brides parents, Mr. and Mrs. Carl Schaefer, at Stayton on Wednesday, May 14th, Mr. H. H. Henline, of Corvallis and Miss Lizzia Schafer, R. Shelton, justice of the peace, officiating.

Farm Poultry House.

It is essential that the poultry house be separate and apart from other buildings on the farm. Poultry requires treatment which cannot be given them when allowed to run and roost with other kinds of farm stock. Their uncleanly habits make them unsuited as companions for stock and it is very disagreeable to have them roosting about the barn or in implement sheds. The feathers afford a suitable harbor for all kinds of vermin and when allowed to roost in stables or barns they will cause both cattle and horses to become infested with lice. Kept in a house of their own these evils can be avoided and the fowls themselves can be kept in a much better condition.

It is natural for fowls to lay in the feed boxes and mangers of the horse barn when allowed access to them, and it is supposed by some that they do damage to hay when permitted to run in the barn. For the purpose of doing scavenger work and laying in inviting mangers they are allowed to run in the barns in the day time. This is far preferable to letting them roost there. A great many farmers make attempts to keep them out at all times, but this is not attended with success. By keeping the poultry house dry and warm, and always keeping it clean and inviting the hens will not have so much of a desire to go to the barn. They only seek the barn as a place to lay when they do not have inviting conditions in the poultry house. There is such a thing as making the poultry house so uninviting as to drive the poultry away from it.—Ex.

Divine Friendship.

How constant is God's friendship! He loves us with an everlasting love and to the end, when other friendships are upon slight grounds easily and often broken off.—John Howe.

A bill to grant the elective franchise to women is to be introduced into the Ohio legislature during its coming session. It will be backed by a monster petition, to which over 50,000 signatures have already been appended. Many of the signers are men.

The little town of Marmaton, Kan., is practically run by women. It has a woman school-teacher, a woman telegraph operator, a postmistress, a woman pastor in charge of its only church and a woman letter carrier.
