SCIO, LINN COUNTY, OREGON, MAY 1, 1903

EDITORIAL.

The Oregonian says that employment agents complain that while they are prepared to furnish work for 500 men, and while there are many men applying for work, for some reason they find it difficult to procure men to take the kind of work and wages offered. There is demand for section hands on railroads at $1.25 and $1.50 per day, but the Italians, who have been doing most of this work, now want $2 or $2.25, the wages paid to woodchoppers, etc. There is work for many men as farm hands and milkers at $30 to $35 per month, but many who are sent to the farms to do such work come back complaining that there is too much work to do, or that they do not like milking. Even Chinese and Japs say they want the same wages as white men get. Agents say that many of the men who are looking for work are afraid of finding it, but they occasionally have calls from men not long from the East, who have not yet picked up the half-hobo style, and they are ready to work and very willing.

The latest postal laws are that the publishar can arrest anyone for fraud who takes a paper and refuses to pay for it. Under the law, the man who lets his subscription run along for some time unpaid and then leaves orders for its discontinuance lays himself liable to arrest and fine the same as theft. It will be seen that many disputed points are disposed of by that decision, which is certainly just, says the Eugene Guard. If a subscriber does not want to renew his subscription, let him notify the publisher. The second decision given here will be a surprise to some publishers who believe they must stop a delinquent subscriber if ordered to. The delinquent must pay up if he wishes to discontinue his subscription. Otherwise he is held responsible for it as long as the paper is being sent to him, whether he takes it from the post-office or not.

The Dutchman and the Dog.

A Dutchman addressing his dog said: "You vas only a dog, but I wish I vas you. Ven you go mit the bed in, you shust durn round dree times und lay down. Ven I go mit the bed in, I have to lock up the place und vind de clock und put de cat oud und undress myself und my wife wakes up und scolds me, den de baby cries und I hav to valk him up and down; den maype ven I shust go to sleep it's time to ged up again. Ven you ged up, you shust stretch yourself und scratch a couple of times, und you vas up. I haf to light de fire, put on de kettle, scrap mit my vife already, und maype get some breakfast. You play round all tay und haf plenty off fun. I haf to work all tay und haff plenty of trouble. Ven you die you vas dead, ven I die I haf to go to hell yet.

GREATLY ALARMED.

By a Persistent Cough, but Permanently Cured by Chamberlain's Cough Remedy.

Mr. H. P. Burbage, a student at law, in Greenville, S. C., had been troubled for four or five years with a continuous cough which he says, "greatly alarmed me, causing me to fear that I was in the first stage of consumption." Mr. Burbage having seen Chamberlain's Cough Remedy advertised, concluded to try it. Now read what he says of it: "I soon felt a remarkable change and after using two bottles of the twenty-five cent size, was permanently cured." Sold by All Dealers.

Rules for Barbers.

The following are said to be some of the rules of the state barbers' association which registered barbers are supposed to observe.

They provide that the barber shall not allow his finger nails to grow long, for obvious reasons and they are to be kept clean; that a razor shall be cleaned after being used on a person with the smallpox or a dead man; that the same towel shall not be used on more than a dozen persons, whether the patron grumbles or not; the use of anesthetics for painless shaving is strictly prohibited; attention of the operator is not to be diverted by political or religious discussion in the shop; workmen are to confine their statements within range of possibility, and no barber is to allow wase hair to accumulate under his chair to deceive the public as to the amount of business he is doing.

The President's Special Trian.

The President's special train which is carrying him during his Western trip, consists of six coaches, a baggage car, a Buffet and a smoking car, a regulation sleeping car, a compartment sleeping car and the President's car. The latter, named the Elysian, will be last on the train and is divided into an observation parlor, three staterooms, a dining room, in two sections, a kitchen and a servants section. The President will take all his meals en route in his car.

The President is accompanied from Washington by Mr. John Burroughs, the writer and naturalist, who will remain with him until he reaches St Louis on April 30, and throughout the trip by Dr. Rixy. Secretary Root will join the party at St. Louis but will remain with it only a few days. In passing through Iowa, Secretary Shaw will accompany the President and President Nicholas Murray Butler, of Columbia University will meet the train at St. Louis and travel with it for some weeks. It has been determined that the President will sound the key-note of next year's campaign on this trip and his pronouncements will be received with the keenest interest

A Sure Thing.

It is said that nothing is sure except death and taxes, but that is not altogether true. Dr. King's New Discovery for Consumption Is a sure cure for all lung and throat troubles. Thousands can testify to that. Mrs. C. B. VanMetre of Shepherdtown, W. Va., says: "I had a severe case of Bronchitis and for a year tried everything I heard of, but got no relief. One bottle of Dr. King's New Discovery then cured me absolutely." It's infallible for Croup, Grip, Whooping Cough Pneumonia and Consumption. Try it. It's guaranteed by E. C. Peery, Druggist. Trial bottles free. Reg. sizes 50c, $1.00.

Too Great a Risk.

In almost every neighborhood someone has died from an attack of colic or cholera morbus, often before medicine could be procured or a physician summoned. A fruitful remedy for these diseases should be kept at hand. The risk is too great for anyone to take. Chamberlain's Colic, Cholera and Diarrhoea Remedy has undoubtedly saved the lives of more people and relieved more pain and suffering than any other medicine in use. It can always be depended upon. For sale by All Dealers.

A Farmer Straightened Out.

"A man living on a farm near here came in a short time ago completely doubled up with rheumatism. I handed him a bottle of Chamberlain's Pain Balm and told him to use it freely and if not satisfied after using he need not pay a cent for it," says C. P. Ryder, of Pattens Mills, N. Y. "A few days later he walked into the store as straight as a string and handed me a dollar saying, 'give me another bottle of Chamberlain's Pain Balm. I want it in the house all the time for it cured me.'" For sale by All Dealers.

Quick Arrest.

"If women would pay more attention to their health we would have more happy wives, mothers and daughters, and if they would observe results they would find that the doctors' prescriptions do not perform the many cures they are given credit for.

"In consulting with my druggist he advised McElree's Wine of Cardui and Thedford's Black-Draught, and so I took it and have every reason to thank him for a new life opened up to me with restored health, and it only took three months to cure me."

Wine of Cardui is a regulator of the menstrual functions and is a most astonishing tonic for women. It cures scanty, suppressed, too frequent, irregular and painful menstruation, falling of the womb, whites and flooding. It is helpful when approaching womanhood, during pregnancy, after childbirth and in change of life. It frequently brings a dear baby to homes that have been barren for years. All druggists have $1.00 bottles of Wine of Cardui.

JOBSON AS A DOCTOR.

"Do you know what I am going to fetch home on my way from the office this evening?" inquired Mr. Jobson of Mrs. Jobson at the breakfast table one morning about ten days ago.

Mrs. Jobson had no idea, of course, and said so.

"I'm going to fetch home," said Mr. Jobson, oracularly, "about two pounds of powdered sulphur and a jug of blackstrap molasses of the old-fashioned kind."

"What for?" inquired Mrs. Jobson.

"What for?" repeated Mr. Jobson, with a surprised expression. "Now, what d'ye suppose powdered sulphur and molasses are generally used for—eating too? Mrs. Jobson, might I inquire whether you ever had a home as a young girl—a real, sure-enough home, presided over by a mother who knew enough to repair to shelter when the rain began? Is it possible that you never heard of the combination of sulphur and molasses for use as a blood-purifying spring medicine?"

Oh, yes; Mrs. Jobson had heard of that.

"You have, eh?" said Mr. Jobson. "Well, what do you think of it as a spring medicine?"

Mrs. Jobson reluctantly replied that she thought it all right in some aspects, but—

"There are no 'buts' about it," said Mr. Jobson, in his most impressive judicial tone. "Sulphur and molasses make the greatest spring medicine that ever came over the hills. And that's the stuff that we're going to take every morning before breakfast for a month or so. Just like everybody else, we've been sitting around all winter like hothouse plants, eating too much, and not taking anything like enough exercise. The result is that our blood's all thickened and clogged up, and if we don't take something to clarify our systems we're liable to attacks of illness for the rest of the year. Sulphur and molasses is the thing, and when we take it right along for about a month we'll feel like colts just turned loose in a field of dandelions."

Mr. Jobson, having assumed his I-have-spoke manner, Mrs. Jobson didn't make any reply for the sake of peace, but it was obvious that she wasn't looking forward to the sulphur and molasses scheme with any great degree of equanimity.

Mr. Jobson was as good as his word, and home he brought that evening the package of powdered sulphur and a huge jug of blackstrap molasses, for which he had to search the town. After dinner he mixed the great spring medicine in a large crock, all the time conversing volubly on the wonders wrought by the stuff on the human frame if consistently adhered to.

"It won't do you any good if you only take it once in awhile," he explained. "You've got to stay right with it every day for a month or so to get any good out of it. It may not taste like pate de foie gras, but that's only a detail. It's reachin', so to speak, and that's the main thing."

When Mr. Jobson made his appearance for breakfast the next morning Mrs. Jobson was already presiding over the crock of sulphur and molasses.

"Have you taken yours yet?" inquired Mr. Jobson.

"No," she answered. "I was waiting for you to come down, so that we could take it at the same time. Ugh! It looks so nasty!"

"Don't try to be quite so girly-girly, Mrs. Jobson," said Mr. Jobson, sarcastically. "Airs like that aren't exactly becoming in a person of your years."

Mrs. Jobson produced a couple of tablespoons and handed one of them to Mr. Jobson. But if she expected that he was going to be the first to go against the spring medicine she was mistaken. He stood by in an attitude of expectancy, and so there was nothing for her to do but to dip into the crock, delve up a spoonful of the grisly mixture and swallow it. She made an extremely wry face over it, but said nothing.

Mr. Jobson then dipped into the mess, bringing up a considerably smaller spoonful than Mrs. Jobson had taken, and downed it. His countenance looked mightily disturbed by the time he had swallowed the stuff, and he spluttered and coughed a lot over it for some time.

"Do you like it as well as you did when you were a young one?" inquired Mrs. Jobson.

"It's great!" spluttered Mr. Jobson, but he didn't say it in a convincing way. He didn't have his usual appetite for breakfast, and he looked thoughtful throughout the meal.

He wasn't feeling well, he said, when he returned home that evening, and he went to bed early. When he made his appearance in the dining-room for breakfast Mrs. Jobson was again hovering over the sulphur and molasses crock. Mr. Jobson didn't go anywhere near it.

"Well, the spring medicine is stirred up and waiting," said Mrs. Jobson. Mr. Jobson pretended to be so interested in the headlines of the morning paper that he didn't hear her.

"Are you ready for the blood purifier?" inquired Mrs. Jobson again, and again Mr. Jobson pretended that he hadn't heard. Then Mrs. Jobson walked right over to where he had plumped himself in a chair and said:

"My dear, shall we take our sulphur and molasses now?"

"Huh?" said Mr. Jobson, making believe that he had just emerged from his trance.

"Our spring medicine, you know," said Mrs. Jobson.

"Oh," said Mr. Jobson, sternly, "you mean that beastly decoction that you forced upon me yesterday morning, do you. No, Mrs. Jobson, I, for one, am not—not, not going to take it this morning or any other morning. You can take all you want of it—gallons and hogsheads of it, if you choose—but if you think for an infinitesimal fraction of time that you're going to bullyrag and bulldose and hector me into souping my system with a poisonous mess that makes me feel as if I'd been living on poisoned snails for a month, that causes me to wake up in the morning with a taste in my mouth like a mudturnip or glove, that puts every tooth in my head on edge and that's liable to make me break out in boils and carbuncles until I'd look like a twentieth century Job—then you're dreaming, Mrs. Jobson, and it's pretty near time for you to wake up."

The crock of sulphur and molasses went into the garbage can by the time the stop gentlemen got around that morning, and Mrs. Jobson never deposited anything in that receptacle that did her so much good.—Washington Star.

Slim Chance for McCarthy.

"I understand the doctor has just been to see your husband, Mrs. McCarthy," said Mrs. McCarthy's employer. "Has he made a diagnosis?"

For a moment Mrs. McCarthy was submerged in a sea of doubt, but she rose triumphant.

"No, surr," she said, confidently, "he left it to me, him saying I was well able to do it, surr. It's to be made wid linseed on a shtout muslin, surr."—Youth's Companion.
