

HIS FATHER'S SON.

With a broad face and full brown hair, the son of the great man, the boy looked like a miniature of his father. He had the same eyes, the same nose, the same mouth, the same chin, the same ears, the same hair, the same everything. He was a perfect copy of his father, a perfect copy of the man who had made a name for himself in the world.

The father, who was now an old man, looked at his son with a pride that was almost painful. He had spent his life in the struggle for the right, and now he had a son who was just like him. He had a son who was just like him, a son who was just like him.

The son, who was now a young man, looked at his father with a respect that was almost painful. He had grown up in the shadow of his father's greatness, and now he was a man in his own right. He had a father who was just like him, a father who was just like him.

HER EXPERIMENT.

By Ernest M. Galt.

She was a good and had formed an unalterable resolve never to marry. It was that, to think from the concrete to the general, or, in other words, individuality, and she felt herself too valuable to be disposed of in that way.

For very many years, Ethelinda Coddington, a young girl, had been in the habit of looking at the world as a whole, and she had resolved from her earliest childhood to rise to that challenge, come what might. She had a plan, and she was going to carry it out. She was going to be a woman, and she was going to be a woman.

She had a plan, and she was going to carry it out. She was going to be a woman, and she was going to be a woman. She had a plan, and she was going to carry it out. She was going to be a woman, and she was going to be a woman.

Nothing daunted, however, she made the round of every son and daughter of the house, and after careful consideration, she had chosen her father's son. She had chosen her father's son, and she was going to carry it out. She was going to be a woman, and she was going to be a woman.

She had a plan, and she was going to carry it out. She was going to be a woman, and she was going to be a woman. She had a plan, and she was going to carry it out. She was going to be a woman, and she was going to be a woman.

At the wedding a month later Jack Melvin was best man, and after the ceremony he kissed the bride, shook hands with all the guests in defiance of etiquette and otherwise distinguished himself. And while concentration was concentrated upon Miss Grayson that was, he held a short conference with the professor, in which he seemed to allude to certain dark and mysterious transactions known only to those two.

These transactions must have been of a peculiar nature, for neither Jack nor the professor smiled, though their eyes danced, and the warm hand clasp of both in greeting, and the professor's hearty "God bless you, my boy," gave no clue to their meaning.

anner of converts he out-herded them in his zeal. He went everywhere, and he carried the message with which he was entrusted. He was a man of great energy, and he was a man of great faith. He was a man of great energy, and he was a man of great faith.

He was a man of great energy, and he was a man of great faith. He was a man of great energy, and he was a man of great faith. He was a man of great energy, and he was a man of great faith.

Ethelinda was in raptures over the prospect, and no sooner had she established a safe footing over the treacherous waste than she was daily to be seen in the little boat, propelled by the professor, hurrying to the distant fields.

This went on for a week, and everything was lovely. But one day in mid-stream the little boat sprung a leak. Ethelinda would not believe it until the water was half way to her ankles. So faithful, so staunch a craft to go back on her! But there was nothing for her but to make land as quickly as possible, and from that point she seemed perilously far away. Ethelinda would have fallen flat in three feet of water, but the professor could, if need were, swim like a duck, and now there was urgent call for all his artifice.

By stuffing his soft hat into the rent at the bottom of the boat (Ethelinda proffered hers) the river was held in check, but this was clearly only a makeshift. Any moment their frail vehicle might fall them, and then what? Why, the swift current of the remorseless stream, which would sweep them away from life and light forever, and bury them fathoms deep in sand and unsightly debris.

Ethelinda thought of this for one dreadful, agonizing moment, then she became aware of the professor speaking, and she made a desperate effort to listen to what he was saying.

He was telling her in calm, even tones, that there was no immediate danger, that even if the worst came to the worst he could swim with her to shore, provided she remained calm, and did exactly as he told her to do. White and rigid, she promised, though in her heart she saw very little hope.

The professor was, on the contrary, almost gay. He filled the oak skin, and he hummed a lively tune, and he told her to do this and that, and he told her to do this and that, and he told her to do this and that.

Fortunately at that point the river bottom was firm, and the boat struck, and after the first shock Miss Grayson covered her countenance. There was no danger, to be sure, but the professor, with which the professor faced it, he turned her face, and she looked at him, and she looked at him, and she looked at him.

He was a man of great energy, and he was a man of great faith. He was a man of great energy, and he was a man of great faith. He was a man of great energy, and he was a man of great faith.

"Hello, professor," he shouted, "what are you and Miss Grayson doing out there? You'll get wet if you don't mind."

"That you, Jack?" shouted the professor in turn. "Fetch out your boat if you have one and help us out of this beastly fix. Upon my honor, we've had a close call."

Ten minutes later the four-oared boat had justified its presence, and Ethelinda, seated in the stern, was wringing the water from her drenched skirts and warmly thanking Jack Melvin for his timely assistance.

"Don't mention it," said Jack, "the professor had already rescued you when I appeared on the scene."

"Yes," replied Miss Grayson, blushing crimson. "I owe my life to the professor, and I shall always be grateful to him for the favor."

At the wedding a month later Jack Melvin was best man, and after the ceremony he kissed the bride, shook hands with all the guests in defiance of etiquette and otherwise distinguished himself. And while concentration was concentrated upon Miss Grayson that was, he held a short conference with the professor, in which he seemed to allude to certain dark and mysterious transactions known only to those two.

AND COLORS.

Discovery of a Remarkable Phenomenon by a Scientist.

Harz of Light Which Produces Certain Colors Corresponds Exactly with Certain Tones—See in Medical Instructions.

It has been the dream of poets that some subtle, sympathetic relation exists between tones and colors, and the harmonizing of one and the artistic blending of the other appear to be the same sense of the beautiful, the sweet sounds and pleasing colors effects are very much akin. The Benefit of Change.

We are like house plants. We need a change of soil now and then—to be replanted. New scenes, new experiences, new surroundings—a change of climate, dry air instead of moisture, sunshine in place of cloud. This is sometimes essential to health. There are conditions now at hand that are better than two can offer. Take a month or two in California. Plant yourself for a time where there are no irritations, where the hotel is beyond criticism, the landscape pleasing, and where you can walk and drive freely and dry air, and the increased electric influences of sunshine are very helpful.

You can make this trip for very little expense, and enjoy a ride over the scenic Sixteen and Shasta mountains which at this time of the year with snow-covered peaks, are unsurpassed for their grandeur.

Five Good Reasons.

That the Rio Grande route is the most popular one between the Pacific coast and the east, is evidenced by the fact that the greater part of transcontinental travelers use it.

First, the scenic attractions in view are unequalled in the world.

Second, the route is especially condensed for tourists or excursions being especially adapted for ladies traveling alone by children, affords a comfortable mode of travel at rates within reach of all.

Third, it is the only route between the East and West passing directly through Salt Lake City, or modern Zion.

Fourth, the choice of two distinct routes through the heart of the Rocky Mountains.

Fifth, three fast through trains daily between Ogden and Denver equipped with every modern convenience.

There are many other reasons why this route is the most comfortable and enjoyable in the whole country.

His Last Hope Realized.

[From the Sentinel, Gelo, Mont.]

In the first morning of Oklahoma to settlers in 1890, the editor of this paper was among the many suckers after fortune who made the big race one fine day in April. During his traveling about and afterwards, his coming upon his claim, he encountered much bad water, which, together with the severe heat, gave him a very severe diarrhoea, which it seemed almost impossible to check, and along in June the case seemed so bad he expected to die one day one of his sons brought him one small bottle of Chamberlain's Colic, Cholera and Diarrhoea Remedy as a last hope. A big dose was given him, while he was walking about on the ground in great agony and in a few minutes the dose was repeated. The good effect of the medicine was soon noticed and within an hour the patient was taking his first sound sleep. For a fortnight that little bottle worked a complete cure. This remedy not only feels grateful. The season for bowel disorders being at hand subjects this item. For sale by all dealers.

Notice to Dog Owners.

You are hereby notified that the license on dogs is now due and you are requested to call on the Recorder and settle the same.
