T. E. Nelson, a swede living near Grants Pass committed suicide by blowing himself to pieces with dynamite last week. Enough pieces of him could not be found to bury. Following is the note he left:

"Cannot do work enough to make a living. My heart refuses to act. Cannot bear to become a burden to anybody. When I go I want to go quick and want to go off as fine as the vapor emanating from a crematory. Will find my grave at the foot of a fir tree on the northeast corner of my 40-acre lot. Wish you all well and that you may live all a long, prosperous and happy life. Yours in a happy mood, T. E. NELSON."

"P. S.—You may notice a jar. That jar does take place at the moment of my funeral."

"P. S.—Later—For fear that said jar may exceed my expectation in force, I have concluded to go farther to the west than aforesaid place as far as to a sugar pine tree top where shingles and clap boards have been made. Fare-ye-well."

In anticipation of a demand for mail boxes we have secured samples of all kind of boxes, from the cheapest to the best and have them at this office for your inspection. We furnish any of these boxes with the News or with the Oregonian. Those living on prospective mail routes are invited to come in and inspect these boxes at any time.

The telephone lines from this office are about all completed and with the exception of about thirty all have received their phones. Subscribers can now be connected with about eighty farmers around Scio. A charge of ten cents is made to all those who have no phones. To the best of our knowledge no other office in the state has as many farmer lines as the Scio office.

Application has been made for two rural mail routes to start from the Scio postoffice and it is expected to hear from them in a short time. Rural letter deliveries have come to stay and it is to the interest of Scio to secure as many of them as possible for the reason that they are bound to come and if not from Scio from some of the smaller post offices in this neighborhood.

A Texas editor hits the right spot when he says: "The sorriest cuss on earth is the cuss who will sit around and cuss his own town. If I live inside the north pole, I would call it home, and would be ready to boost it up. If I couldn't say anything nice about it, I would say that my job didn't 'come high.' I would not stay in a town I had to cuss—not while the world is as big as it is now."

A large number of cattle have been lost in this vicinity recently and in every case there was no sign of any disease whatever. M. W. Miller is poorer by over fifty head of cattle than he was last Fall, while W. G. McDonald and G. M. Bilyeu have lost a great many. It has been, in almost every instance, the best stock that has died. Stock that has been kept in good condition with plenty of hay and mill feed goes so weak that they simply lie down and die, while others that have been turned out in a pasture where it is thought they couldn't live, have survived the storms and are now gaining some. It's a queer condition of things and the only reason advanced so far is that there has been an unusual scarcity of grass and that dry fed cattle have died simply for the want of something green.

Dairying has been revolutionized during the last few years. The hand cream separator has done more towards modernizing this industry than has any other influence. Within the last three years the hand separator has come to be more of a fixture in the dairy farmhouse than has the sewing machine. The separator is here to stay, and the possibilities it has created for this region in the way of dairy developments are immense.

The one point above all others that makes the hand separator so effective is the fact that the warm skim milk can be fed to calves, while the cream—chief source of revenue—can be shipped in first-class condition to bring the high prices now being paid for butter fat. Thousands of dollars will be added to the value of each good dairy farm in this region during the next ten or twenty years, and it will be the hand cream separator which will do it. If the hand cream separator makes it possible for you to sell $500 to $1,000 worth of cream from a herd of eight or ten cows during the year, and enable you to raise calves which you can market for as high a price as what you got for your calves before, is it not increasing the value of your farm?

The immediate future is to see the rural telephone, a fixture in every well ordered community. The rural phone is coming, because it is an inalienable security of eternal fitness. A few dollars of wire and phone, and a trifling switching privilege place the farmer in instant communication with neighbors, with town, with distant city. The need of the hour is made known by the effort of a moment. The isolation that has driven millions from farm to town is removed by an investment so small in comparison with the benefit, that it is a laudable. By the rural phone, inconvenience is swiftly transformed into convenience, and the country made responsive to the throbs of progress as is the city.

The only question in the matter is what community will be swiftest to realize the importance of the new order, and secure the greatest benefit by being first to install it. The town that leads in the movement and thereby secures widest connections in its system will realize the greatest advantage. Russell built Harbin in the heart of Manchuria as a swift and certain means for becoming master of that rich province, Corvallis can be adjacent rural communities to her by bands that will never sever if she will realize the value of rural phone connections, and act swiftly and aggressively upon the realization. The home-seekers, of whom thousands are coming will best like the farm that a man's effort will bring in connection with neighbors homes or neighboring town. That makes the farm more valuable, because more salable, and tends to make more residents in the community. More residents means more business, more people to buy merchandise, more people to make wealth. The question cannot be debated, because all the reason, all the fact, all the truth is on one side. There is but one possible conclusion, and that is the wiser the rural system and the quicker it is installed the better, and the longer the longer the delay in acting, the greater will be the loss of what will be a golden opportunity. Every man who ought to lend an ear and aid to the present rural telephone movement. It is self preservation, because if he don't do it he will lose—and lose heavily.—Times.

ROBBED THE GRAVE.

A startling incident is narrated by John Oliver of Philadelphia as follows: "I was in an awful condition. My skin was almost yellow, eyes sunken tongue coated pain continually in back and sides no appetite growing weaker day by day. Then I was advised to use Electric Bitters; to my great joy the first bottle made a decided improvement. I continued their use for three weeks, and am now a well man. I know they robbed the grave of another victim." No one should fail to try them. Only 50¢ guaranteed at E. C. Peery's drug store.

DEATH OF MRS. RHOADES.

Mrs. W. H. Rhoades died this morning of the result of her father-in-law, of bronchitis, consumption, after a lingering illness. She was born in Scio on Dec. 27, 1867, the daughter of Mr. Brown, a prominent man of that city, and spent most of her life in this county. She was a woman of exemplary character, beloved by a large circle of friends. A husband and three small children, Elma, Charles and Elwood, survive her and have the sympathy of all in their loss.

A FAKE, BUT NO JOKE.

Some one in the spirit of fun on day last week fixed up a fake dispatch on a regulation blank, and stuck it up in the postoffice. It said that Russia had declared war against the United States, and it was not long before its contents were generally known. Excitement soon ran rampant, and a volunteer company was soon organized to go to the front. Old veterans who had fought in the civil war had their old-time spirit aroused, and were ready and willing to forget their old age and be boys again. But their ardor and high hopes were soon dashed to pieces when operator Burke appeared on the scene and said it was a fake, but no joke.—Lakewood Examiner.

PEARY'S DISCOVERIES

Beneficial Results of the Explorer's Labors in the Arctic.

Detailed Account of His Trips Into the Frozen North and His Grand Service to Arctic Exploration.

The greatest credit is due to that indomitable explorer, Lieut. Peary, for his latest work in defining the geography of the arctic regions. Although he has not yet succeeded in reaching the north pole, or indeed, in traveling as far north as did Nansen and Amundsen, he has made a contribution to our knowledge of the arctic regions which, in extent and usefulness, compares favorably with the work of any previous explorer, and may be regarded as an ample return for the risks and labors of his long season of exploration, says the Scientific American. As a result of his work around the northern coast of Greenland, and the geographical boundaries of the great island, the northern hemisphere are now defined with scientific accuracy. The only break in the coast line consists of a short length of un-surveyed land between Independence Bay—so named by Peary at the time of his discovery, nine years ago—and Cape Bismarck, on the east coast of Greenland. Thus the explorations of Greenland, which have been in progress now for a thousand years past, are practically completed by Peary's arduous labors and thoroughly scientific methods. His work, stated in detail, consists of surveying that portion of the coast line of Melville bay on the west of Greenland, and a survey of the entire northwestern, north and north-eastern coast as far south as Independence Bay; and the accurate mapping out of the channel which extends through Smith's sound to the Arctic ocean on the north coast of Greenland. Peary has also traveled 2,400 miles on the great inland ice cap, and has located its extreme northern limits; twice he has crossed Grinnell Land, and he has also given us an accurate location of its western shore to a point considerably south of existing surveys. It is true that other explorers have traveled further north than he; but their work, although of great scientific interest, and extending perhaps more of the elements of the spectacular, has not given to the world such a considerable increase in its geographical knowledge as results from Peary's latest travels.

Peary has also done great service to arctic exploration by proving that his theories as to the best method of traveling are correct. He set out on this last trip with the conviction that, if the north pole is ever to be reached, it must be done with the cooperation of the natives and with the extensive use of dogs and sledges. In his recent work he has given practical proof of the soundness of his theories. Early in the next spring it is his purpose to make a first "dash for the north pole" which, if successful, will add greatly to his well-earned fame. Should he succeed in reaching it, he will confer a double benefit upon arctic exploration, since he will at once settle a greatly overrated, but much considered question, and by so doing will divert the energy of subsequent explorers to the more useful work of mapping out the undiscovered regions within the arctic circle and rounding out to completeness our geographical knowledge of the northern hemisphere.

THEY KNOW HIM.

"Here's another story about 'the oldest inhabitant,'" he remarked, looking up from his paper.

"Who is he?" she asked, although without displaying much interest.

"I know," broke in the bright little girl.

"So do I," asserted the smart little boy.

"You know who the oldest inhabitant is," repeated the father in surprise. "Well, who is it, Ethel?"

"It's the man who dies so often," answered the bright little girl.

"You're always reading about him in the paper."

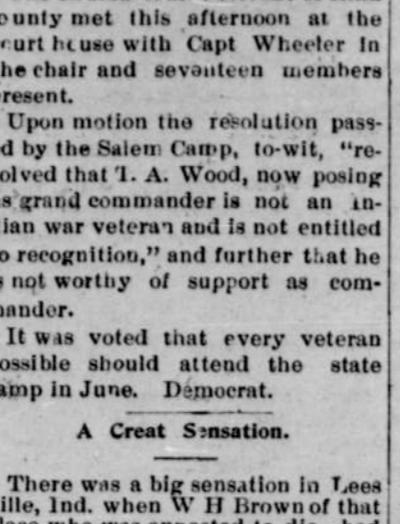

"Huh!" ejaculated the smart little boy, scornfully. "I guess you don't know what you're talking about. It's the fellow that's always remembering about cold winters and hot summers when the weather's bad."—Chicago Post.
