O. H. He belongs to three fraternal orders—Halsey Lodge, I. O. O. F., in the state organization of which order he has served as Past Grand Patriarch and Past Grand Representative, and is at present Grand Treasurer of the Grand encampment; also Dowdall Lodge No. 16. ### THE LIMIT.

BY FRANK Y. BECKMAN.

He had been known as a hopeless drunk and "good for nothing" for so long that he believed it himself. His friends had argued with him until, at last, they had abandoned further effort and decided to let him drift on as he would. They were disgusted with him, and even he admitted they had cause to be. And yet, they still found something in his nature—perhaps it was his frank manner of confessing his faults, or perhaps, his sincere, if futile, desire to reform, and, as his friends would urge, make something of himself—or, perhaps, with some, it was the only way he had of smiling under fire. His friends told him he was weak and not viciously bad, and he himself believed he was weak and was very doubtful about the latter.

HEALTH

"I don't think we could keep house without Theford's Black-Draught. We have used it in the family for years, and it has been the best of results. I have not had a doctor in the house for that length of time. It is a doctor in itself and always ready to make a person well and happy." JAMES HALL, Jacksonville, Ill.

No Doctor

is necessary in the home where Theford's Black-Draught is kept. Families living in the country, miles from any physician, have been kept in health for years with this medicine as their only doctor. Theford's Black-Draught cures biliousness, dyspepsia, colds, chills and fever, bad blood, headaches, diarrhoea, constipation, colic and almost every other ailment because the stomach, bowels liver and kidneys so wisely control the health.

THEFORD'S BLACK-DRAUGHT

and "good-fellow" kind of manner. He drifted back again, he did not understand why, and soon, to his own surprise, found himself on quite an intimate footing, contented to sit silently studying her features and their ever growing beauty. As a result, he grew ashamed of himself and made determined resolutions to reform, which were as frequently broken as made, and as promptly made again. He soon began to think that she understood him as no one else had ever done. She found so many good traits in his character, delightful surprises to him, that he finally decided to become the man that she believed him to be. He decided to start with a clean slate—and so told her one evening, as they were sitting before the cheerful fire, of his life and spared nothing in the relating. Confession was sweet, and, of all else, he had never been a hypocrite, and he wanted to show her what good she had done him. Not a word was uttered during his recital. She simply had sat quiet, with her hands folded on her lap, gazing steadily into the fire. He wondered, now and then, as his story progressed, of what she was thinking, whether she recalled she had, if she was trying to read in the live coals the dreary future opened up to her, why the cat annoyed him brushing his leg.

When he had finished, he, too, sat quiet, vaguely wondering if he had been wise in telling, but then he did not want to be a hypocrite. Listening to the heavy clock ticks, he seemed to hear them set themselves to the words: "You have lost her." He wondered why he only now felt how very dear she was to him and how useless life seemed without her. What was the use of his strenuous efforts, of his abstinence? No matter now what he did or became, he had just shattered her good opinion of him and how could a woman love a man after that? "Is there any more?"

Her mild question startled him out of his reverie. He was but dimly aware of the stillness of the house, of her quiet, constrained tones as she remarked how late it was, as she bade him good-night, of her saying that she wanted to think it all over. As he walked slowly toward her, he reviewed again all he had told her. Yes, he had certainly been frank, brutally frank, and made a clean breast of it. After all, had it been necessary? Well, he would leave it until to-morrow. The night's sleep would clear his thoughts.

The next day he received her answer and he thought that if he loved her before, he certainly adored her then. Her faith in him remained unshaken, and she loved him more than ever. How bright the world suddenly looked! How joyous his heart sang! They had been secretly engaged for almost a year, a whole year of unalloyed happiness, for they knew there would be parental objections. His friends had noticed the change in his habits, but could not wonder and accepted his reformation as complete. He felt that he had worked hard, but it had been a pleasure to work, thinking constantly of her. Her faith in him was firm. His progress was slow, but they were encouraged. He was steadily gaining headway and, this evening, he and she attended the play together. The evening passed quickly, as all such evenings had, and he gladly accepted her invitation to come in a moment and warm himself before going home. The moment had lengthened silently, as usual, when she said: "I realize I've made a mistake. I've been wanting to tell you for some time, but did not have the courage. I'm so sorry—but I think it best to break our engagement, don't you? You know you don't like hypocrites." He found himself trying to remember what the play they had just seen had been and dimly wondering why he could not say: "Why don't you say what you are thinking? Why don't you abuse me, as I deserve?" she added.

He stood looking at her dumbly, dumbly. "I suppose," she continued, "you will go back to your dreadful drinking—to your old life!" "I don't know," he muttered. "Good-night!"—Mirror.
