Deafness Cannot Be Cured

by local applications, as they cannot reach the diseased portion of the ear. There is only one way to cure deafness, and that is by constitutional remedies. Deafness is caused by an inflamed condition of the mucous lining of the Eustachian Tube. When this tube is inflamed you have a rumbling sound or imperfect hearing, and when it is entirely closed, Deafness is the result, and unless the inflammation can be taken out and this tube restored to its normal condition, hearing will be destroyed forever; nine cases out of ten are caused by Catarrh, which is nothing but an inflamed condition of the mucous surfaces.

We will give One Hundred Dollars for any case of Deafness (caused by catarrh) that cannot be cured by Hall's Catarrh Cure. Send for circulars, free.

COSSACKS TAKE CITY

Russian Banks Shelter 1,500 — Shah Withdraws His Troops From British Legation.

St. Petersburg, July 4.—The foreign office here has received dispatches confirming the reports of recent desperate fighting at Tabriz. The quarters of the city in which the revolutionists had taken up their positions were captured by Cossack cavalry. Among the Shah's forces was a detachment of the regular Cossack brigade, which was dispatched to the northeastern part of Persia some time ago on account of expected disorders. One thousand five hundred women and children are said to have taken refuge in the buildings of the Russian bank. The pillaging at Tabriz, according to the latest information, is still going on.

Tricked His Enemies.

London, July 4.—A special dispatch to the Times from Teheran, June 16, supplies a long history of the events that led to the recent coup d'etat. According to this announcement certain old discarded courtiers demanded the dismissal from the palace of a clique of conspirators. A delegation also called upon the Shah to expel certain court favorites, including Amir Bahadur and Chapsal Khan, two of the Shah's most trusted councillors. The Shah craftily feigned compliance and quietly prepared to escape from the capital. On June 4 everything was ready and Bahadur's wild horsemen galloped through the main thoroughfares brandishing swords and rifles, causing a wild stampede. Suddenly a whole regiment of Cossacks with guns ready for attack, followed by the tribal cavalry with wild cries of "Long live the Shah" and "Down with the traitors," halted before the palace.

The bazaars were all closed up and the people ran in fear of their lives. The Shah's carriage, driven by six bay horses, was seen issuing from the gun square surrounded by the six courtiers who it was supposed had been dismissed, escorted by every horseman the Shah could muster, each with his rifle ready to shoot anybody who might dare to impede the Shah's passage.

All this happened within ten minutes and within another ten minutes his majesty was breathing the fresh air of Bagshah, the royal garden outside the western gate. Later in the day the queen and the crown prince went to the royal garden with an escort of 400 horsemen. This soon became the center of the royalist activities and the surrounding gardens were appropriated and a regular camp formed which continually increased its forces. The people were taken completely by surprise at first, thinking the whole thing a joke, but they soon discovered their mistake.

PUNISH JAP SOLDIER.

American Consul Secures Imposition of Severe Penalties.

Seoul, July 4.—A Japanese soldier ran amuck Thursday through the American Methodist missionary premises at Ping Yang. He assaulted a Corean caretaker with a bayonet, chasing him through the missionary residence.

American Consul Sammons, when informed of the affair, called at the Japanese residency and demanded the punishment of the soldier.

By order of Prince Ito the soldier was arrested and immediately sentenced to two months' hard labor. The colonel, major, captains and lieutenants of the regiment to which the soldier belonged will be disciplined by a confinement of from three to seven days.

The prompt action of Prince Ito is significant of the determination of the Japanese resident-general that the soldiers maintain a proper attitude toward foreigners. The charge against the soldier was the violation of an American home, and the disciplining of the officers was due to the fact that soldiers of the same regiment recently participated in the damaging of an American Presbyterian missionary school building at Wiju. In that case all damage was repaired by order of the resident general.

Lone Mariner Gives Up.

San Pedro, Cal., July 4.—The sloop Star, 18 tons register, has reported at the custom house. Captain Nelson, navigator and crew, reports that he left San Francisco June 18 for Unalaska on a prospecting tour. Ten days out from the Gate he met with an accident and suffered many hardships before he made port with a broken leg. In the daylight hours he sailed the Star the best he could and at night he battened everything down, close-reefed the sails, trusted to luck, and finally found himself 500 miles off his course, near this port.

Woman Saves Forest.

Pasadena, Cal., July 4.—Riding through a wall of fire to get to her home in the mountains, Mrs. J. Swigert reached a telephone and notified the authorities of a serious forest fire in Millard canyon. Mayor Early of this city sent 50 men to the scene and this force with the assistance of forest rangers is reported to have the fire under control after a considerable territory was burned over. Mrs. Swigert escaped without serious injury.

STATE CONTROL OF WATER.

Paper Presented at Recent Meeting of Oregon State Grange.

By John H. Lewis, State Engineer.

When we see the miracles wrought by irrigation and think of the potential energy of our streams as representing thousands of acres of the most valuable coal lands, it is no wonder that we hesitate to challenge the statement that the water resources of Oregon are today its most valuable asset. Yet our legislators have persistently refused to enact laws governing the use and distribution of this valuable commodity. Far-sighted corporations are rapidly acquiring perpetual franchises to the use of water for power development, without present or possible future compensation to the public, from whom the privilege is acquired.

Through the lack of a reliable record of vested rights to the use of water, the public has no means of ascertaining the location and amount of unappropriated water which is available for new uses. Large quantities of water are being held without use through actual or threatened litigation, and the intending investor or settler moves on to more progressive states, where water rights can be secured by application to the state officers, and when granted are protected, the same as other property rights. The holder of these questionable vested rights joins with the power interests in opposing the enactment of any law providing for public control and making beneficial use the basis of rights to the use of water.

How Water Is Appropriated.

Any person can acquire a water right by simply posting a notice at the proposed point of diversion, stating the amount of water claimed, the intended use, and recording a copy of the notice at the county court house. If the water is to be used for irrigation purposes, a certified copy of the notice must be filed with the state engineer within 30 days thereafter. It makes no difference if the waters of the stream are already fully utilized at points below. The notice can specify any amount, even though such amount exceeds the regular flow of the stream. It may be impossible to use the water beneficially for the purpose as claimed, but that makes no difference so long as construction is commenced within six months. Your title is then complete, but the record is not completed by the filing of proof that work has commenced. By refiling every six months, a water right can be held without the performance of any work until some legitimate investor trys to secure control of the same water right. Then work must be commenced and prosecuted with due diligence. Under this law one of our leading attorneys has stated that a one-armed man with a shovel, employed at the intake, can hold a water right indefinitely. Thus the legitimate investor must first buy off the notice man, who has contributed nothing to the public welfare. Even the payment of this blackmail does not give him clear title to the necessary water, for the apparent supply may, perhaps, all be fully utilized in the adjoining counties below, through which the stream runs.

In the absence of state control, the only way for this investor to even guess at the amount of unappropriated water is to first measure the stream, and then travel down the same, measuring the maximum capacity of each ditch, to ascertain how much of this water has already been appropriated. If the stream is a hundred or more miles in length, this task alone would discourage the most enthusiastic investor or settler. Then the records of water filings, under our present laws, must also be examined to ascertain how many rights have been initiated which may ultimately become vested and prove prior in time to his right. Notices claiming water, posted in thickets along the banks of a stream, cannot be found and are, therefore, of no value to him. The county records are of but little, if any more value, as the recorded claims to water invariably exceed many times the regular flow of the stream. For example, the records of Baker county show claims to the waters of Powder river for irrigation purposes amounting to over eighty times the flood flow of this stream at Baker City during 1905, and the 1,145 recorded claims for all purposes amounted to over one hundred and eighty times this flood flow. These claims, therefore, cannot all be vested rights, and it is impossible to ascertain from the record which, if any, are valid, or ultimately may become vested. Besides, many ditches have been built and water diverted without any public record whatever. In a separate record will be found court decrees affecting titles to the water of this same stream. These decrees may divide the water among a minority of claimants, without any consideration whatever of the rights of the public in the unappropriated waters. The county record thus serves only to cloud title to unappropriated water and discourage investments.

The stream under consideration by the investor may flow through or border on two or more counties where water titles are equally as complicated as described for Baker county. To abstract the water records of the Deschutes river would require a journey of practically 1,000 miles, and the examination of the worthless records of five counties.

Under the 1905 act, all filings for irrigation purposes were to be recorded in the state engineer's office at Salem, but no penalty was provided to enforce this provision. Out of 138 filings in Baker county under this act, only five were recorded at Salem. Thus what was intended for a complete record is, therefore, of no value to the public.

Resulting Litigation.

The conditions in California are identical with those in Oregon. The Commonwealth club has labored for years to secure the enactment of modern water laws, and in the proceedings of this club we find the statement that the bar of California was delighted to find in their primitive water laws such a fruitful source of income, and did nothing to remedy conditions. "The statutes in question have been the foundation of some of the large fortunes of California, but these fortunes are held exclusively by the attorneys of record of the misguided individuals who availed themselves of the privilege granted by these statutes."

A case is reported where ditch "A" sued ditch "B" and upon the sworn evidence introduced obtained a decree giving it a priority of twenty cubic feet of water per second. Ditch "B" sued ditch "C" with the same result, and ditch "C" thereafter sued ditch "A" with the same result, and there were still 25 ditches diverting water from the same stream whose rights were not determined.

Along the Walla Walla river in Oregon, litigation to secure a proper division of the stream has been in progress for about 30 years, without settling a single issue. This experience is typical of many other communities and should serve to demonstrate the failure of the present system of distributing water by the courts, through injunction proceedings.

There are approximately 200 ditches diverting water from this stream in a distance of 10 miles, for the irrigation of some 5,000 acres. Nearly 500 persons or corporations have been made parties to the latest suit, and 25 lawyers retained to protect the various rights. When the decree is rendered, the relative rights of the various ditches will be known, but how will the water be divided among them? The pioneer irrigator knows that the court cannot deny him his usual water supply, and though his right has been determined for perhaps the second or third time, the question is still, how to get this water at the time when needed. How will he determine which of the many ditches above is diverting water without right, in order to bring an injunction suit against it?

The decree is binding only on the parties to the suit. New appropriations can and will be made, thus forcing new litigation. The same conditions which brought on the present suit still exist and this decree, without additional legislation, will be of no more value in settling conditions than former decrees.

The supreme court, by consistent decrees, has enacted practically all the water law of this state. To expect the court to provide in their decrees for the complicated administrative machinery to make water decrees effective looks like a complete shifting of the burden from the legislature to the courts. This, in the opinion of leading water right lawyers, is not possible.

One of the leading attorneys in the Walla Walla river case estimates that the present suit will ultimately cost between $20,000 and $25,000. This enormous drain upon the agricultural resources of this small valley, for a negative result, cannot help but retard settlement and discourage capital.

The purchase of a water right in Oregon means the purchase of a law suit. No litigation over water rights in this state has ever settled any issue so that it cannot again be raised. The decrees are binding upon only the parties to the litigation. These decrees often serve to cumber title to the unused waters, as the state, interested in preserving the unappropriated waters for future users, has not been represented in court at trials of these cases.

Conserving Our Waters.

In the arid portion of this state the area of irrigable land far exceeds the regular water supply. The summer flow of these streams can be increased many fold by the storage of water in the mountains, and using the natural channel to convey such water to the place of intended use. This class of development, which is encouraged and protected in Wyoming, Idaho and other states, is absolutely impossible in Oregon, except under the most favorable conditions. Capital will not invest in such storage works until the state provides the necessary administrative machinery for protecting stored water as it passes down the stream past numerous ditch diversions to the place of intended use.

No State Protection.

It is not a crime in Oregon to steal water. In fact, the law encourages it. As stated above, any person can acquire a water right by posting a notice or digging a ditch and diverting water, regardless as to the area of crops destroyed at the lower end of the valley by such wrongful diversion. Without the necessary administrative machinery, and a reliable record of vested rights to the use of water, it would be impossible to enforce any criminal law covering water, even if enacted.

Theft of water in an arid region is as serious a crime as destroying the crop of another, since it amounts to the same thing in the end, yet this state maintains no department having control of diversions from public streams. There is no department to which the homeseeker or investor can write to ascertain if the water rights claimed for constructed works are as represented, or whether any unappropriated water remains in a certain stream. Even if unappropriated water exists, there is no method provided by law for acquiring clear and undisputed title to this water from the public, to whom it belongs.

It requires constant litigation on the part of early appropriators to secure their rights. Where the price of justice exceeds the value of the water right, the place must be abandoned.

Woman's Wit.

An emperor of Germany besieged a city which belonged to one of his rebellious noblemen. After the siege had lasted for a long time the emperor determined to take it by storm and to destroy all it contained by fire and sword. He did not, however, wish to injure the defenseless women; therefore, he sent a proclamation into the town, saying that all the women might leave the place unhurt and carry with them whatever they held most precious. The nobleman's wife instantly decided to take her husband, and the other women followed her example. They soon issued from the city gate in a long procession, each one with her husband on her shoulders. The emperor was so much struck with the noble conduct of the women that he spared all; even the city itself was left untouched.

Only Night Air at Night.

Speaking of Florence Nightingale and her efforts to keep the world healthy, it seems pertinent to make special mention of her mission in behalf of the open window at night. In the early years of her labors much unintelligent opposition to this method of ventilation because of the supposed harmfulness of the night air was expressed, but Miss Nightingale had one stock argument in support of her position, it being the question, "What sir shall we breathe at night but night air?" It was unanswerable from her opponents' point of view, even if it did not always convert them, but it did lead a countless number into saner ways of living and along the way to the present methods of treating tuberculosis.—Boston Transcript.
